Days of Yore.

By SARAH TYTLER, Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline." 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

"The concentrated power which we admire in 'Citoyenne Jacqueline' is precisely the kind of power to ensure an equal success to the author in 'Days of Yore.' No story in the book disappoints us; each has 'the virtue of a full draught in a few drops'; and in each there is the quintessence of such a novel as Thackeray might have written."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Every quality of merit which was conspicuous in 'Citoyenne Jacqueline' is apparent here also. The first tales in these volumes give us some of the finest descriptions of scenery we have ever read, while the meditative mood into which Miss Tytler frequently falls in these eighteenth century reminiscences is very like that delightful chit-chat with which Thackeray indulged his readers so often."—Spectator.

Doctor Austin's Guests.

By WILLIAM GILBERT, Author of "Shirley Hall Asylum," &c. 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

"Mr. Gilbert is one of our best story-tellers, and we cannot give much higher praise to 'Dr. Austin's Guests' than to say that it is quite as clever a book as 'Shirley Hall.' It is individual. No other known writer could have written such a book so well. From the first page to the last nobody is in his senses. With all this the firm consistency to a right reason of unreason in every sketch is remarkable. . . . This is one of the small number of current works of fiction that are not made only to be borrowed from a lending library, but are worth putting on one's book-shelves."—Examiner.

London Poems.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "Idyls and Legends of Inverburn," &c. Small 8vo, 5s.

"No volume of poems has appeared for many years in London which so certainly announces a true poetic fame."—Spectator.

"These 'London Poems' make good the promise of 'Undertones.' They are true and genuine work; the result of real observation and personal emotion."—Athenæum.

Cosas de Espana:

Illustrative of Spain and the Spaniards as they are. By MRS. WM. PITT BYRNE, Author of "Flemish Interiors," &c. With Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

"Mrs. Byrne's is the best book we have yet seen on Spain. It is comprehensive, and at the same time minute, very graphic in its details, and written in a liberal, philosophic style."—Daily News.

Citoyenne Jacqueline:

A Woman's Lot in the Great French Revolution. By SARAH TYTLER. With Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"'Citoyenne Jacqueline' is one of those rare books of which every sentence deserves to be read leisurely, and will repay the attention with pleasure."—Guardian.

"We pronounce 'Citoyenne Jacqueline' superior to any except three or four of the novels of the age."—Press.

The Year of Prayer:

Being Family Prayers for the Christian Year. By HENRY ALFORD, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Arne:

A Sketch of Norwegian Peasant Life. By BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSEN. Translated by AUGUSTA PLESNER and SUSAN RUGELEY POWERS. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"The most charming love story of the year."—Illustrated Times.

"Such fresh little bits of nature come to us rarely. They are green spots in the arid waste of fiction."—Athenæum.

"It is, in fact, a fairy book for men and women."—Westminster Review.

Master and Scholar:

And Other Poems. By E. H. PLUMPTRE, M.A., Professor of Divinity, and Chaplain, King's College. Small 8vo, 5s.

"The present volume will certainly add to Professor Plumtre's reputation. It is worthy to be put on the same shelf with Heber and his own favourite, Keble."—Westminster Review.

Eastward.

By NORMAN MACLEOD, D.D., one of Her Majesty's Chaplains. With 70 Illustrations. Small 4to, 14s.

"It is the most enjoyable book on the Holy Land we have ever read."—Nonconformist.

Studies for Stories from Girls' Lives.

With Illustrations by J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., and others. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Each of these studies is a drama in itself, illustrative of the operation of some particular passion—such as envy, misplaced ambition, sentimentalism, indolence, jealousy. In all of them the actors are young girls, and we cannot imagine a better book for young ladies."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Wealth and Welfare.

By JEREMIAH GOTTHELF. 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

"For a long time we have not read a book in which the style was at once so fresh and individual, without being forced. The two volumes are a perfect little mine of shrewd observation. There is, too, a good deal of quiet humour of a peculiar kind exhibited by the writer in the course of the two volumes—a something which reminds us of George Eliot in 'Adam Bede,' without for an instant suggesting imitation. . . . Possibly 'Wealth and Welfare' may prove to be too delicate a dish to touch the general palate; we recommend it, however, to those who still preserve a taste for what is delicate in books of light reading."—London Review.

The Light and Life of Men.

By JOHN YOUNG, LL.D. (Edin.), Author of "The Christ of History." Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"His idea is beautifully worked out in his volume, which, like all Dr. Young's writings, is characterised by deep thought and the keenest appreciation of spiritual things."—Spectator.

Views and Opinions.

By MATTHEW BROWNE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Matthew Browne's volume of essays is the work of a highly sensitive and cultivated mind. There is a rare and original vein of sportive humour which runs throughout its pages. . . . These are rare qualities; and the book in which they are displayed has few, if any, recent equals."—Westminster Review.

Vignettes:

Twelve Biographical Sketches. By BESSIE RAYNER PARKES, Author of "Essays on Woman's Work." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is a very charming volume. It will make many acquainted with persons worthy of being known, who have hitherto been names and nothing more."—British Quarterly Review.

COMPLETION OF THE CRITICAL ENGLISH TESTAMENT.

On the 15th November will be published, the Third and concluding Volume of
THE

BEING AN ADAPTATION OF BENDEL'S GNOMON, WITH NUMEROUS NOTES, SHOWING THE PRECISE RESULTS OF MODERN CRITICISM & EXEGESIS.

EDITED BY

Rev. W. L. BLACKLEY, M.A., and Rev. JAMES HAWES, M.A.

3 vols. crown 8vo, price 18s.

The Publisher is desirous of drawing attention to this important work, the purpose of which is to enable the English reader, with the Authorised Version in his hand, and without any knowledge of Greek, to understand the precise results of modern criticism in revising the text of the New Testament. It seems strange that the English language has been until now without a book containing this information.

REVIEWS.

"Of Bengel's 'Gnomon,' Archdeacon Hare justly said :—'He condenses more matter into a line than can be extracted from pages of other writers.' The 'Gnomon' still stands facile princeps; it needs supplementing, but it has not been superseded. Such supplement the Editors have supplied by incorporating the most important results of modern textual criticism, such as are contained in the works of Tischendorf, Alford, Ellicott, and others. A more valuable handbook for the Bible student could not have been supplied."—British Quarterly Review.

"Bengel is a pious writer to a high degree; and the mixture of his rich spiritual exegesis with strictly critical matter is no ordinary advantage. We recommend the work as by far the best, for the size and price, which has ever appeared in England."—Clerical Journal.

"In this very useful work scarcely a single passage of interest in the New Testament is left unexplained."—Church and State Review.

"The Editors of this valuable work have put before the English reader the results of the labours of more than twenty eminent commentators. He who uses the book will find that he is reading Bengel's suggestive 'Gnomon,' modifying it by the critical investigations of Tischendorf and Alford, comparing it with the exegetical works of De Wette, Meyer, Olshausen, and others, and adding to it also profound remarks and glowing sayings from the writings of such men as Trench and Stier. The book is a handsome one, and a marvel of cheapness."—Evangelical Magazine.

"This work will enrich every library in which it is placed."—Watchman.

"It is the best form in which Bengel's 'Gnomon' has yet been given to the English public."—London Review.

"For the English reader the best and cheapest commentary on the New Testament."—Freeman.

"We know nothing equal to it for the English reader."—Christian Spectator.

BOOKS WANTED.

Letters, stating price and condition, to be forwarded to the Advertisers.

No charge being made to Subscribers for inserting a moderate number of "Wants," it is but fair that as little trouble as possible should be given, although some appear to think that they cannot give too much, and others that they cannot possibly write too badly for the printers, nor give too much trouble to the Editor by their orthographical and bibliographical blunders. The following rules should therefore be observed:—1st. No list should include more than five books. 2. The list should be written plainly, in the same manner as the "Wants" are printed. 3. No books which have been advertised for in any other publication are admissible. 4. Catalogues wanted, or Books bearing upon specific subjects mentioned generally, and not by name, or more books than five, must be paid for at the rate of sixpence each article, and stamps sent with the list. 5. Lists must be received by the 25th of the month. 6. The Editor holds himself at liberty to reject or leave out any book or list he may think proper.

 As any infraction of these rules may lead to the rejection of the entire list, and thus cause delay and disappointment, Subscribers are requested to observe this notice.

TRADE AND LITERARY GOSSIP.

BOOKS WANTED.—Some of our subscribers will be disappointed at not seeing their "wants" inserted: they have themselves to blame for this, by not attending to the conditions on which alone any wants can be inserted.

Mr. William J. Day, recently head of the business of William Day and Son, and since then managing partner of the firm of William Day and Son, Limited, has retired from that business and recommenced at 20 Cockspur Street, as a Fine Art Printer and Publisher. The first work he announces is a set of Raffaele's seven cartoons in chromo-lithography for 21s.

Mr. Ranken, who for the past seven years has had the management of Messrs Cassell, Petter, and Galpin's printing establishment, and under whose superintendence the office has attained such an eminent character for wood-out printing, has now left in order to commence business on his own account.

GREAT SALE OF COPYRIGHTS.—Messrs. Southgate and Co., who have removed from Fleet Street, to No. 143, Strand, recently sold the greater portion of the stock and copyright of Mr. S. O. Beeton. Amongst the lots were Beeton's Family Bible, which fetched £200; Mrs. Beeton's Book of Household Management, £3,350; Beeton's Book of Garden Management, £450; Dictionary of Universal Information, £2,500; Book of Home Pets, £450; Dictionary of Biography, £400; Everyday Cookery, £600; Englishwoman's Cookery Book, £350; Capt. Crawley's Handbook of Games, £145; Boys' Own Library, £450; Reuben Davidger, £100; Runnymede, £100; Robinson Crusoe, £150; Gulliver, £100, besides a large number of smaller books. In every case the stereos and copyrights were included. The copyrights, &c., fetched £10,200, and the stock £8,960, bringing a total of £19,160.

Nailsworth.—The business of Mr. Johnson has been disposed of by Mr. Holmes, to Mr. Lewin.

A NEW TRADING COMPANY.—We have received a prospectus of the "Educational Trading Company, Limited." Capital £20,000, in share of £2 each. The object of the Company is to manufacture and supply schools and teachers with stationery, books, and school materials; to publish books for authors, and gradually to acquire copyright works. The head-quarters are at present fixed at Birmingham. The manager, Mr. John Kempster, was formerly school traveller to Messrs Jarrold and Sons, of Norwich, and Messrs. Philip and Son, Liverpool.

The Christian Year.—It is painful to think that a volume which has become one of our household books, which is being read with profit alike by High Churchmen and by Low, portions of which have been incorporated in every collection of hymns for public worship, and many verses of which are as familiar in the mouths of our children as household words, should immediately after the death of its venerated author become a field for fierce polemical debate—a debate, which if persisted in, will take the volume out of general use and consign it to the hands of party. The cause of the contention is this: in the poem on “Gunpowder Treason” occur the following lines:—

“O come to our Communion Feast!
There present in the heart,
Not in the hands, th’ Eternal Priest
Doth His true self impart.”

In the edition published subsequent to the author’s death, the second and third lines run thus—present in the heart

As in the hands.

thus completely altering the sense. The alteration has been made by the author’s brother, the Rev. Thomas Keble, as it is stated, in accordance with the wishes expressed by the author when on his death-bed. We greatly regret the alteration. All who knew Mr. Keble are aware that he was very much in the habit of consulting friends before he published anything, and there is good reason to believe that, according to his general practice, he would have shown the proposed alteration to some whose advice would have modified his own views, or would have shown him the undesirableness of making such an alteration in a work so generally received as this. Moreover, there is some reason for thinking that if the alteration had been such as to modify the doctrine of the real presence, it would not have been made, and that those who now most strongly desire to retain the verse in its altered form, would as strongly object to any alteration whatever, and would insist upon Mr. Keble’s poems being left as Mr. Keble published them in his lifetime.*

A MATTER OF TASTE.—Captain Mayne Reid having had the misfortune to appear in the Court of Bankruptcy, some of his friends formed themselves into a committee, and in order to give greater publicity to the fact inserted the following advertisement in the Times of Dec. 15:—

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID IN THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.—The Committee return thanks for the very liberal support they have received in response to their appeal. They confidently believe that the desired end may be accomplished. The Committee propose that each one of the gallant Captain’s numerous admirers shall purchase a copy of his last and greatest work, “The Headless Horseman.” Those who desire to do so by forwarding their address with a post-office order, to the Secretary, shall receive, postage free, a copy of “The Headless Horseman.” The only edition published is in demy 8vo, 2 vols., splendidly illustrated, price 12s. Address 47a, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square, W.—CHARLES OLLIVANT, JUD., Hon. Sec.

We trust the response to this appeal has been equal to the wishes of the gallant Captain’s Committee. From another source we learn that Captain Mayne Reid is about to make his débüt as a public lecturer.

An alteration has been made in the Law of Copyright in France, extending the rights, of heirs to fifty years after the author’s death.

* It is said that Mr. Keble intended to accompany the proposed alteration with a note giving his reasons for making it, but no note is to be found in the altered edition.

A NICE LITTLE JOB.—The North American Review for October exposes some of the iniquities practised in New York under the sanction of the Common Council of that city. Amongst other things, it appears that a “Manual” of that body is published annually; that for 1865 is a sumptuous 12mo. volume of 879 pages. It contains a coloured map of the city, a steel-plate portrait of the editor, facsimile of the Aldermen’s signatures, a plan of the Aldermen’s Chamber, showing where each member rests his nether limbs; sketches of fur stores, billiard saloons, grocery, and other stores, where some of the precious corporation scraped up dollars, and a variety of other pictures. The bill paid for ten thousand copies of this volume contained the following items:—

	dols.		dols.
Engraving	4,358	30 Reams Tissue . . .	150
Engraving & Printing 733		Papering 10,000 Copies 100
Drawing and Printing 5,150		10 Reams Wrapping 150
Printing 10,000 copies 27,951		Binding 5000 cloth . 5,000
Corrections, &c.	300	„ 4,000 muslin . 4,000
Paper for Titles	600	„ 1000 morocco . 2,000

To which had to be added 3,500 dollars, or £700, paid to Mr. D. T. Valentine for editing; making in all the modest total of 57,172 dols., or in English money nearly 24s. a copy. The present Mayor, Mr. J. T. Hoffman, had the courage to veto the proposition of a similar volume for 1866. He told the Council that he had ascertained from Messrs. Harper that 10,000 copies could be produced for 30,000 dollars, or little more than half the sum paid for 1865. But the reviewer, Mr. James Parton, affirms that instead of ten thousand, no more than three thousand copies were printed at a cost of about 15,000 dollars, and that the compiler put the rest into his own pocket! The article is one that is well worth reading by all who are desirous of seeing how a strictly popular government can be carried on in a free country.

POOR OLD GENTLEMAN!—It was reserved for the present editor of the Gentleman’s, (our oldest magazine,) who, we understand, is the Rev. Edward Walford, to reduce the much respected “Sylvanus Urban” to the level of Bow Bells or Reynolds’s Miscellany, but such appears to be his fate, for the “Table Talk” of the Guardian, who appears to know all Mr. Walford’s secrets, informs us that the reports of proceedings of the learned societies will be discontinued to make room for an historical novel. Poor old Gentleman!

IRELAND.—It is rarely the case that we have anything remarkable to notice in connection with the literature of Ireland. A glance at our advertising pages tells a sad tale, for while advertisements of new books and new editions reach the BOOKSELLER from all parts of the world, Ireland is scarcely ever represented. Yet a small contribution, sufficient to show that all is not stagnation, comes from Mr. James Duffy, of Dublin, in the shape of four small volumes, consisting of “Liguori on Prayer,” “The Imitation of Christ,” “Liguori on the Commandments,” and “Scupoli’s Spiritual Combat,” the four volumes for one shilling. And we understand that Mr. Duffy is now printing no fewer than 50,000 copies of William Cobbett’s “History of the Reformation.” This shows that there must be some life amidst the apparent deadness. How much more creditable would it be if those who really wish their country well could lay aside party politics for a time, and would endeavour to promote a spirit of reading and a love of literature in the body of the people.

THE COMPOSITORS' ADVANCE OF WAGES QUESTION.—The agitation which commenced about a year ago in favour of an advance of the rates of wages among compositors has terminated without a strike, the masters and the men having frequently conferred together, and finally agreed upon certain terms, which, it is said, satisfies both parties. These terms are, we believe, as follows:—

1. That an advance of one-halfpenny per thousand letters be paid on all descriptions of work, except newspapers, whether the copy be in manuscript or in print.

2. That the definition of reprints in the Scale of 1847 be adhered to; but that the remodelling of punctuation and orthography be made in the copy before it is given out to be set up, and not in the proof.

3. That the establishment wages be £1 16s. per week of sixty hours, instead of £1 13s., for sixty-three as heretofore; the apportionment of the hours of labour to be mutually agreed upon between the employer and the journeymen in each office.

4. That no compositor be required to work more than ten hours and a half a day without being paid 3d. per hour extra, as overtime.

5. That Sunday work be paid for at the rate of 6d. per hour extra, but that in no case shall the compositor be paid less than 2s. 6d. extra.

6. That no deduction be made for pieced leads in measures [widths of columns of pages] of less than twenty-six ems wide [twenty-six ems is about the width of the full measure of the page of the BOOKSELLER].

7. That one farthing per thousand extra be paid on all Roman founts for every en below twelve ems of their own body in thickness [the em used in calculating the width and depth of ordinary pages is a letter m of pica type turned on its side].

8. That corrections be paid for at the rate of 7½d. per hour [that is to say, corrections made by the author in his proofs, and all such corrections as do not arise from the compositor's own fault; these latter are always made at his own expense, irrespective of the number of proofs or revises required, including such alterations in orthography and punctuation as the printer's reader may consider necessary].

The foregoing modifications of prices were not understood to apply to works in progress or the current volumes of periodicals; the advance to take place on the latter on the 1st of January, 1867.

At a first glance, these modifications seem fairly enough to meet the requirements of the men, and not to be too difficult of compliance by the masters, seeing that all advances of wages, in every trade, must eventually come out of the pockets of the ultimate purchasers, the public. There is no question that the compositors, as a body, were under-paid. Their labour is of a really intellectual character, for they must not only be able to read the most difficult manuscript with facility, but they are expected to understand the art of punctuation, and to correct their author's orthography whenever it is in fault. In this matter of spelling, compositors could probably take a higher stand in a competitive examination than nineteen-twentieths of the candidates for employment in the Civil Service. Familiarity with the styles of the various writers whose "copy" passes through their hands has given many compositors a taste for literature, and not a few have themselves become authors of no mean reputation. Among modern writers who rose from the composing-case to the author's desk, it is necessary only to name Douglas Jerrold and Captain Mayne Reid. As a body, compositors are intelligent, well-conducted, and thoughtful; and it does therefore seem strange that their average incomes are less in amount than those of carpenters, working engineers, and other operatives whose labour is mechanical rather than intellectual.

We entirely concur in the necessity for an advance in the price paid for their work; but we venture to think that both men and masters have somewhat missed the object for which the agitation was commenced. It strikes us that they have allowed the opportunity to pass of thoroughly revising the scale of prices for all descriptions of work, and thus preventing the recurrence of such disputes as have too frequently grown out of their present antiquated rules. With some slight modifications, the compositors' scale has remained in much the same state for nearly forty years; and now, instead of amending it in a complete and satisfactory manner, employers and employed have contented themselves with a merely temporary measure. Many of the anomalies of the printing-office have remained untouched. For instance, a man who though unable to earn more than 25s. a week at piece-work, might be usefully employed at day or "establishment work," is precluded from obtaining such work, because he may not accept less than 36s. per week, or 2s. a day more than his labour is worth. Again, the charge for standing pages in the advertising sheets of books and magazines is simply for the time occupied in placing them in the forme of type, but if a fresh advertisement of ever so small an extent be introduced into the standing matter, the whole page is claimed by the compositor, and charged as though the entire quantity of type in it had been newly set up. These are but two instances out of many that might be cited of the inconsistencies sanctioned by the present scale. We do not pretend to say that some of the alterations adopted are not improvements; but we submit that they have stopped short at a point which, while it may satisfy the men, by no means meets the justice of the case, as far as the masters and their customers are concerned. That our view is correct is endorsed by the fact that several large printing establishments—for instance, the Times, Lloyd's Newspaper, Messrs. Spottiswoode's, and Messrs. Woodfall and Kinder's—have adopted scales and modes of payment of their own, not by any means in accordance with those of the London Society of Compositors. Without endorsing the saying of an eminent bookseller, that printing went out with the introduction of the iron press and the composition roller, we cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that, in spite of higher wages and more expensive modes of operation, printing generally has deteriorated, and in this, as in other manufacturing processes, beauty and completeness have been sacrificed to rapidity of production.

Mr. Bennett draws our attention to an act of injustice we have been guilty of to his printer, Mr. Unwin, of Bucklersbury. He sent us early copies of two volumes of poems, and in order to furnish them complete they were made up of proof-sheets; hence our strictures. Mr. Bennett now sends us perfect copies, which are exceedingly well-printed.

Mr. Ridgway will shortly publish a collected edition of the writings of the late Mr. Cobden, many of which have long been out of print.

THE well-known organ of the Congregational dissenters, the Patriot, will this year cease to have a separate existence; so will the British Standard, connected with the same body, a paper started several years since by Dr. Campbell. Out of their ashes will arise The English Independent, which will take for its watchwords, "A New Reformation and Complete Religious Equality." As the paper "will command the undivided support of the whole body of Congregationalists," it is to be presumed that that influential body requires reforming, and that "complete religious equality" does not exist among its members.

A CORRECTION.—We have to beg Mrs. Camp's pardon (parding?)!; her biography is to be found in "Martin Chuzzlewit," and not in "Nicholas Nickleby," as stated in the Christmas BOOKSELLER. We are sorry to find that both Mrs. Harris and herself have felt annoyed at our little slip of the pen.

Mr. James Kelly, a gentleman in the establishment of Messrs. Wiley and Son, New York, has just issued the "American Catalogue of Books" (Original and Reprints) published in the United States, from January, 1861, to January, 1866. With Date of Publication, Size, Price, and Publisher's Name; with Supplement containing Pamphlets, Sermons, and Addresses on the Civil War in the United States, 1861—1866; and Appendix containing Names of Learned Societies and other Literary Associations, with a List of their Publications, 1861—1866, serving as a continuation of Roorbach's Catalogue.

From Madame Sartorius, the Parisian publisher, we have received a copy of La Rive, engraved by Paul Chenay, after the original picture by Messonier. The charming productions of Messonier are now well known in England. Visitors to the French gallery in Pall Mall have, for several years past, been delighted with his exquisitely finished cabinet pictures, and even those who seldom enter a public exhibition are acquainted with his work through the medium of the photographs that fill the shop windows. Of these latter La Rive, or "The Quarrel," is one of the best known and most widely appreciated. It is also one of the painter's best productions. The picture, which was presented to the late Prince Consort by the Emperor of the French, forms part of the Queen's collection, and is well worthy of the noble gallery in which it rests. There is much power and character in the representation; all the elements of strife are visible; the composition is faultless, and thoroughly conveys to the spectator the intention of the artist. The engraving whose title we have given is by Paul Chenay, well known for his reproduction of Raphael, Leonardo di Vinci, Rubens, &c., and is in the best style of line engraving.

POLITE CORRESPONDENCE.—The Rev. J. B. M'Caul in writing to a newspaper, says—"It is hard to be held up (by the Bible Society), in the public prints, as a liar, but I am not going to retort the charge upon any member of the committee." S.G.O. writes to the Times to say that Dr. Pusey has a remarkably short memory for things that are inconvenient to be remembered; and the Rev. Orby Shipley writes to the Guardian to deny the truth of a letter addressed to the Times by the Rev. Canon Trevor, and at the same time to apologize for employing him to write an essay in the "Church and the World," as he finds that the Canon is a favourite writer of the Religious Tract Society.

THE GLOBE LIBRARY.—Messrs. Macmillan and Co. having achieved so splendid a success with their "Globe" edition of Shakspeare, of which they have sold nearly eighty thousand copies, announce their intention of continuing the series and forming a GLOBE LIBRARY of the greatest authors of the world; amongst those already in the press are Milton, edited by Professor Masson; Burns, edited by Alex. Smith; and Scott, edited by Mr. Palgrave.

The Library Company, Limited, appears to be in a poor way. No dividend is to be paid. "Subscriptions had fallen off three or four months," but the Chairman at the Annual Meeting announced that the expenses have been reduced, and that he had the opinion of a large publishing firm for saying that next year the Company might be in a flourishing condition. The Company has commenced a "Monthly Circular," and announced a "Special Illustrated Christmas Number," but this does not seem to have made its appearance. The Company are, however, quite ready to receive advertisements, and assure the "general advertising public," that the "very best means" of advertising is thus offered them at the moderate charge of five pounds a page. We have also been informed that the Company is about supplementing the library business by selling books and stationery.

PLAYING CARDS.—Messrs. De La Rue and Co. have issued half-a-dozen new patterns of playing cards, which, if they are not superior to those of former years, are superior to any cards issued by any other house. The patterns for this year are the geranium, the oak and acorn, the blackberry, a beautiful combination of flowers of gold, an Etruscan border and an arabesque, the two latter in Venetian red, black, and gold.

Messrs. Barritt and Co. forward another specimen of their skill in providing the trade with saleable books. A little common prayer book from Her Majesty's printers, bound in Tartan boards, and put up in one of the nattiest of imitation Russia cases lined with velvet to sell at four shillings.

Cassell's Choral Music.—Messrs. Cassell, Petter, & Galpin announce a Selection of Music, to include the most celebrated compositions of the English Glee and Madrigal Schools, together with a selection from the best Italian and German masters, and in addition some original compositions of Macfarren, Smart, Hatton, and Benedict; to be "edited and marked" by Mr. Henry Leslie. It will appear in weekly numbers and in monthly parts, the Voice Parts printed in bold music type, and the accompaniments in a smaller type, but equally clear and distinct,—the price to be one-halfpenny a page.

Messrs. Cassell also announce a new Biographical Dictionary, edited by the Rev. J. Teignmouth Shore, assisted by a strong staff of able and well-known writers. A portrait will be given with every monthly part.

Bible Words for Daily Use.—We believe we are correct in naming Miss Henderson as the authoress or compiler of this valuable little work, which consists of a Bible question for the morning, a promise and precept for noon, and a text of prayer or praise for night. The volume, published by Messrs. Hamilton, Adams, and Co. is nicely bound in morocco, interleaved with writing paper for MS. additions. From the same amiable authoress we have a half-dozen little text books, also interleaved, for presents to the young, who will thus be induced to store their minds daily with some portion of Scripture.

THE FRENCH OFFICIAL CATALOGUE.—M. Dentu, the celebrated pamphlet publisher of the Palais Royal, has given the sum of 503,000 frs. for the exclusive right of publication of the Official Catalogue of the Universal Exposition of 1867; but the right to this exclusiveness has been impugned by Messrs. Sebigre-Duquesne, and the case has already been before the Civil Tribunal of the Seine for two days, and is not yet half concluded.

The works of the late Professor Wilson appear to be out of copyright, judging from the issue of The Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life, and Trials of Margaret Lindsay, in sixpenny editions, by J. S. Marr, of Glasgow, and of other editions at the same price by Messrs. Blackwood and Son.

The Little Marvel.—Under this title the London Stereoscopic Company have issued, at the price of one shilling, a pretty little parlour toy, consisting of a steam engine and boiler: the fire may be lighted and steam got up by any one, however inexperienced; and so safe is the affair that no Accidental Death Insurance ticket need be taken out.

The Working Man has been discontinued, mainly, it is said, from the fact that recent events have given a political direction to the energies of operatives, and the disinclination of its publishers to follow the working men's lead to its legitimate conclusion, manhood suffrage and vote by ballot. It is, perhaps, to be regretted that means were not found to carry on the periodical through a different agency, for it contained many features distinct from those of other publications devoted to the working classes.

A NOVELTY IN TOY BOOKS.—Messrs. Dean and Son have issued two Oil Colour Toy Books, each of which contains one plate in the centre, of the full folio size; another novelty is that the pictures are enriched with gold, so that we have golden cats, golden sheep, golden geese, golden-leaved trees, with golden horns to the bulls and cows, all in a truly Californian state of abundance.

The Savage Club Papers (Tinsley) consist of contributions, literary and artistic, by members of the Savage Club, an association of authors, journalists, dramatists, draughtsmen, engravers, and actors. These contributions have all been made gratuitously, and the book is published for the benefit of the widow of the late Mr. Morton, the artist. That the volume (which is profusely illustrated and handsomely bound) will be a success there is no manner of doubt, for it contains papers by Andrew Halliday, (the Editor), E. L. Blanchard (the pantomime writer), Edmund Falconer (the dramatist), H. J. Byron (the burlesque writer), John Oxenford (the dramatist and Times critic), Arthur Sketchley, Artemus Ward, and other less known writers; with illustrations engraved by the Brothers Dalziel, Edmund Evans, J. Swain, H. Harral, &c. from drawings especially made by George Cruikshank, G. Du Maurier, Ernest Griset, Gustave Doré, T. W. Lawson, J. D. Watson, Harrison Weir, and other eminent draughtsmen; while, from the fact that so many of the writers being engaged on newspapers and periodicals, there will be no lack of critical notices—favourable, of course, in virtue of the good object for which the volume has been prepared. The existence of the "Savage Club" has long been patent to the initiated; outsiders will now have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the personnel of its leading members.

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKSPEARE.—When the first volume of this edition appeared, we unhesitatingly congratulated the editors (Messrs. Clark and Aldis Wright) upon the admirable plan they had adopted, and applauded the limits they had assigned themselves. We have now the pleasure of congratulating them upon the completion and successful issue of their undertaking. The whole learned world has cause to rejoice at what they have accomplished. Except, indeed, by discovering the autograph manuscript of his plays, we cannot conceive in what way the editors could have done a more acceptable service than they have rendered by the publication of this edition of the poet's works. Having on a former occasion explicitly stated the rules by which they have been guided in their labours, and the reasons given for their adoption, it will be only necessary to repeat here, that in all cases of doubt the text that possesses the best authority has been retained; that no novelty in punctuation has been introduced, and that, whilst the spelling has been freely dealt with, so as to reduce it to modern forms; the diction of the poet has been scrupulously and invariably left intact. No correction of doubtful passages has been made; no amended readings have been inserted; not a word has been changed under the pretence of clearing up what other editors had left doubtful. Resolutely adhering to their plan, Messrs. Clark & Wright have advanced nothing conjectural, and so, by the exercise of a discretion not often shown by Shakspearian scholars, have given us a text which may fearlessly be described as the most perfect we possess, and more closely resembling that produced by the poet himself than any we can now ever hope to obtain. Were this all it would be much. But the present edition has another and transcendent merit. Not only does it supply the most satisfactory text extant, but it furnishes us with the text as amended or maltreated by all previous editors. In foot notes are given every variation of a word or passage that exists in all former editions; so that, in effect, we have not only the readings of the quartos and early folios, but the accumulated labours of Shakspearian scholars for one hundred and sixty years. Gathered into one garner, wheat and chaff, lies the produce of a hundred brains. With labour that cannot well be exaggerated, the editors have examined and completely collated no fewer than two hundred and seventy works bearing directly or indirectly on the subject of their attractive inquiry, and have transferred the result to their pages. At a glance, therefore, we may now see the varieties and ingenuities, the successes and failures, of all who, from Rowe to Keightley, have thought and laboured to add laurels to the crown of Shakspeare. Alas! it is a melancholy resuscitation. The commentators of our great dramatist are a much-abused fraternity; their mutual janglings have furnished food for the satire of critics; their acerbities are proverbial for intensity; the meanesses which distinguish them are usually considered not only different in kind but different in degree from those which can be charged against other classes of literary men. Hitherto we were disposed, as we are still disposed, not only to resent this unfavourable view of their character, and to give them credit for singleness of purpose and unselfish aims, but to regard them as men who, whilst riding their own hobbies, have singularly benefited literature. An examination of this edition, however, has completely changed our opinion with respect to the value of their boasted labours. They seem to have done what they should have avoided, and to have left undone what they were expected to have accomplished. Their inconsistencies are provokingly apparent. At one time they are so fastidious as to refuse to change a word that is obviously a misprint, and at another so sceptical as to alter the sense of a passage which requires only a little thought on the part of the reader thoroughly to comprehend. While straining at a gnat, they seem to have no hesitation in swallowing a camel.

The present volume, which is the ninth and last, contains the "Tragedie of Anthony and Cleopatra," the "Tragedie of Cymbeline," "Pericles, Prince of Tyre," and the "Poems" and "Sonnets." To gain at once a notion of the method employed by the editors, and of the variety and value of the numerous readings, it is only necessary to open the volume at random. Here, for instance ("Anthony and Cleopatra," act ii. 2), is a passage in the dispute between Cæsar and Antony. The former had accused the wife and brother of Antony of having made war upon him for the benefit of their relative. The latter denies the charge, and adds:—

‘Of this my letters

Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,

As matter whole you have not to make it with,

It must not be with this."

The third line in the passage is evidently obscure. To show how it has been amended, we quote the several readings, given as notes by Messrs. Clark and Wright:—

"No matter whole you have to make."

(Collier, M.S.)

"You've not to make." (Rowe.)

"You have to make." (Folio 1.)

"You have to take." (Folios 2, 3, 4)

"You n' have to make." (Staunton, conj.)

"You've nought to make." (Anon. conj.)

"You lack to make, or you have to make."

(Anon. conj.)

Again, we have another melancholy example of discordance of opinion in Act. ii. 5. Cleopatra, addressing the messenger, exclaims:—

"O, that his fault should make a knave of thee,

That a'rt not what thou'rt sure of."

Upon this the commentators outdo their usual ingenuity.

The reader will have had enough, or we should give the ludicrous attempts that have been made to elucidate the famous passage in "Cymbeline"—

"Some jay of Italy

Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd him."

One writer converts mother into "Wother;" another into "meeter;" another into "feather;" another into "motheur;" another into "muflier" (!). One conjectures that the line should be, "Whose mother was her planting" (!) and another will have it that it should run, "Who smother her with painting!"

Messrs. Clark & Wright, as we have said, make no attempt to give readings of their own, or offer conjectural criticism. They wisely content themselves with furnishing the text which they consider to be of greatest authority. In this they have been so eminently successful that we believe their settlement may be taken as final. The judgment they have exercised and the discrimination they have shown are great, and the result of their six years' labour is one of the most important contributions of permanent value to English literature that has been made of late years. Their edition is a Shakspearian library in itself.

THE ANTE-NICENE LIBRARY.—In other words, this is a new "Library of the Fathers," supplementing the work so ably commenced at Oxford by Dr. Pusey, the late Mr. Charles Marriott, and Mr. Keble. The series of books now in course of publication by Messrs. Clark, of Edinburgh, commences with those writers who lived in the times of the Apostles, caught some of their inspiration and were imbued with their spirit. Two volumes have already appeared. Vol. 1 is devoted to the Apostolic Fathers. Vol. 2 contains the works of Justin Martyr and Athenagoras. The first volume is of great interest. It commences with the epistles of Clement, who is generally believed to have been the companion of St. Paul in his travels, and the person referred to by name (Phil. iv. 3). Of the first epistle here printed it appears that there is but one M.S. extant, and that is in this country. In 1628, Cyril, patriarch of Constantinople, presented a manuscript copy of the New Testament to King Charles I. Appended to that are two writings described as the epistles of Clement; the first, that referred to, is addressed to the Corinthians, and, if genuine, is of interest as exhibiting the creed of the early Church, and giving some insight into Church government. From the manner in which Clement rebukes opponents, it is clear that all members of the Corinthian Church, even in those early days, were not disposed to submit without a murmur to the rulings of priests and bishops. The second epistle, so called, is considered by the editor to be a portion of a homily falsely ascribed to St. Clement, but of value as a writing not later than the fifth century. The second author contained in this volume is St. Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, and dates from about the middle of the second century. Polycarp was instructed by some of the Apostles, and was thus brought into contact with many who had seen Christ. The epistle is addressed to the Church at Philippi; it quotes and corroborates many passages of the New Testament, speaks of the faith of the Church, and, it is worthy of observation, contains no statement or doctrine which any member of the Church of England could object to, and is thus a negative witness against the additions and developments of later ages. Following the epistle is an encyclical letter of the Church at Smyrna, concerning the martyrdom of Polycarp. Much of this is possibly apocryphal. Next is the epistle attributed to St. Barnabas; this also probably dates from about A.D. 150. The most interesting part of the volume is that which follows—the epistles of St. Ignatius. Some portions of these are without doubt the genuine productions of Ignatius, but the greater part are certainly spurious. The advocates on both sides have been innumerable, and amongst the most learned men the world has ever seen. Could the writings be proved genuine, many disputed questions would be authoritatively solved, as it would thus be seen that they were held by the Church at such an early age. Those that are genuine and undoubted, exhibit the child-like love and simplicity which would be expected from a follower of St. John. All the writings attributed to St. Ignatius are given, and there is a fairly written notice of the discussions that have arisen on the subject. The deficiency we observe is, that the editor has given us no Ignatian bibliography. The same remark applies to the second volume, but will, we hope, be remedied in the forthcoming volumes, as it would vastly add to their value if we had a list of editions, editors, and the materials made use of. Another thing might be added with advantage—a slight sketch of the discussions these various editions gave rise to. Next follows an anonymous epistle to Diognetus. Clearly, it is of very early date, but there is no clue to either the author or the identity of Diognetus. "The Pastor of Hermas," which follows next, was one of the most popular of books in the second, third and fourth centuries, holding a position somewhat analogous to that of Bunyan's "Pilgrim" in the present day. Hermas is supposed to be the person mentioned by St. Paul in the Epistle to the Romans, and Eusebius says that the book was commonly believed to be inspired, and in his day was publicly read in churches. Irenæus speaks of it, and Tertullian wrote against it; and it has the singular fortune of being handed down to us almost intact—Latin and Greek versions being nearly all alike except in unimportant particulars. It is a kind of allegory or dream, and contains a large amount of advice on the conduct of life and the practice of piety. The fragments of Papias complete the volume. Papias appears to have been a hearer of St. John, and on terms of intimacy with many who had known our Lord; from these he gathered up the floating traditions and sayings, and wove them up into a production divided into five books, of which only some fragments remain. Here is one—"Judas walked about the world a sad example of impiety, for his body having swollen to such an extent that he could not pass where a chariot could pass easily, he was crushed by the chariot so that his bowels gushed out."

From this notice our readers will see that the series of works now undertaken is of the utmost interest and importance to all sections of Christians. Dissenters are as much concerned as Churchmen in learning the early history of the Church from the mouths of those who lived and spoke in the early ages, and we believe that a study of these writings will go far to counteract the rationalistic tendencies of the age.

VOL. II. contains the writings of Justin Martyr, who was born about A.D. 114, and suffered martyrdom about the year 165. The works of Justin Martyr are greater in bulk than those of any other writer of the same age. We have not space to describe them. An account of the martyrdom of Justin and some others is given by an unknown author, and the volume closes with Athenagoras, who not only repels charges brought by the heathen, but gives a tolerably complete summary of the Christian faith.

The Comparative Geography of Palestine and the Sinaitic Peninsula. By Carl Ritter. Translated and adapted for the use of Biblical students by W. L. Gage. In 4 vols., royal 8vo. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.—Of all the works on the Geography of Palestine, this is the most valuable that has lately appeared. Compiled and abridged by Mr. Gage from Karl Ritter's exhaustive Erdkunde von Asien, we have here a digest of the entire literature of the subject down to the date of the German work, fifteen years ago. The translator had the advantage of acquaintance with his author, having been for some time a student of the great geographer, and having, moreover, a real devotion to his subject. Karl Ritter seems to have read all that had been written about the Holy Land, and to have entirely mastered all that he read. He had a perfect knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages, as well as of the modern tongues of Europe, together with an intimate acquaintance with the greatest orientalists of his time. Distinguished alike for scholarship and immense industry, he brought to his task a clearness of method which makes the book, in its English dress, of paramount utility to the Biblical student. Many portions of Ritter's original text remain unchanged except by translation; especially the chapters on Philistia, Jerusalem, and Ophir; while the accounts of Hebron, Tabor, the Sea of Galilee, and the line of march supposed to have been taken by the Israelites through the Peninsula, and the chief Biblical site of Palestine Proper, have been only slightly abridged. Egypt and lower parts of Asia, which can be considered as Bible lands only in a secondary sense, are described in less detail, but the whole work bears the impress of great research. Conducted in a thoroughly catholic spirit, the first volume contains a historical introduction, and an examination of the eastern coast of the Sinaitic Peninsula, while the other three volumes relate to the district between Dan and Beersheba, or, in geographical language, the land bordered by the desert and Lebanon. Notwithstanding the formidable dimensions assumed by what may be called Palestine literature, Karl Ritter's work is necessary to a full comprehension of the subject. Most other books have dealt rather with the sentiment of the Holy Land than with its physical features and its relation to surrounding countries. Now, however, the student may trace on the map all the important sites, and gather from Mr. Gage's translation the principal facts concerning them, comparing the Scripture references, as he goes on, with the discoveries of modern investigators, and the accounts of ancient writers. Remembering that the interest felt by Englishmen in all that concerns Palestine is rather theological than geographical, Mr. Gage has given prominence to that feature of the subject; retaining intact all that, in Ritter's text, illustrates the Bible narrative, and giving only so much of the other portions of his voluminous "Geography of Asia" as is necessary to keep the thread of the story unbroken, and sustain the interest of the reader. Read in conjunction with the works of Lynch, Porter, Tobler, and other recent writers, these volumes cannot but prove a trustworthy guide to the Holy Land.

The Texan Ranger; or, Real Life in the Backwoods. By Captain Flack. (Darton and Co., 3s. 6d.)—Here is a book of adventure and description by a real, actual backwoodsman. Our modern Nimrod disdains niceties of style, and has small respect for Lindley Murray; but his descriptions of a hunter's life in Texas are racy and exciting—just the sort of book, indeed, which is likely to send daring boys away from home to become pioneers of civilization in a new world. Here we learn how the opossum is snared and the wild cat caught; how alligators are shot and snakes outwitted; how wild bulls are lassoed and wild horses taught; how flocks of passenger-pigeons darken the sky at noonday, and grizzly bears are trapped at night. We are initiated into the mysteries of trapping, of stag and bison-hunting, and wild turkey catching. But beside all this, we are told how sugar, cotton, and tobacco are cultivated and made fit for market; and how the settler goes to work in clearing his allotment so as to make it profitable; with something about prairie-farming and the stocking of plantations; and all in a straightforward, go-ahead fashion that is really delightful.

MESSRS. WARNE & Co.'s LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

Since our Christmas Number went to press we have received several of the later publications issued by this enterprising firm. Among them are the following:—

The Vicar of Wakefield, a new edition of Goldsmith's masterpiece, in small quarto, with the author's original preface,—by no means the least delightful page of his admirable work. Various full-page engravings, printed in colours, illustrate the text, which is printed in a single column, with a noble margin, on fine toned paper. In some of the interiors the tints employed make the picture look, perhaps, a little too warm; but in the out-door scenes, which are necessarily in the majority, this vividness of tone is a great advantage. We especially admire the pictures of "Mr. Burchell and Sophia in the Hayfield," and "Moses going to the Fair," the light and shadows upon the grass and foliage harmonizing in a very natural and pleasing manner. The effects in these illustrations is produced by a process similar to that adopted by Baxter, colour over colour, except that in this instance the key, or black block, is of wood instead of steel, as was the case in the Baxterian method.

First Steps in the Better Path is a series of stories for young readers, by the authoress of the "Jewish Twins;" with pictures in chromolithography. The stories, though of a religious character, are cheerful in tone and full of incident.

Golden Links is also a volume of interesting dramatic tales, illustrated in a similar manner to "First Steps." Both these volumes are well adapted for New-year's gifts or school prizes.

The Scottish Chiefs. This is the first of a series of "Notable Novels" to be published in six-penny parts, each part to contain a complete work. The text of Miss Porter's celebrated historical novel is printed in double columns, in clear readable type, on good paper. How 256 pages of close print, enclosed in bright paper cover, with an original design, can be produced for the money, and yet made to yield a profit, is one of the marvels of modern publishing.

Penny Readings in Prose and Verse.—This is the tenth and concluding volume of Mr. Carpenter's series of "Penny Readings." Glancing over the "Index of Authors," we are gratified to discover how many really good extracts—several of them original, and many from copy-right works—the editor has been able to make; nor are we less gratified at the reticence of the author himself, only few of his own pieces—excepting, of course, the brief biographical sketch which precedes each reading—being given in the ten volumes. As companion books, Mr. Carpenter has compiled "Fairy Rhymes for Young Readers," and "Sunday Readings;" the latter devoted to sacred and instructive literature by eminent authors, in two volumes, each published at a shilling.

Hidden Sense and Sunday Acrostics are shilling volumes containing numerous specimens of that fashionable form of riddle known as the Double-acrostic. The "Sunday Acrostics" have been formed entirely from names or words found in the Bible.

Warne's Bijou Books consist of neat little six-penny volumes, with gilt edges and coloured frontispieces, devoted to such subjects as Etiquette, the Language of Flowers, Ventriloquism, Archery, and curious in-door and out-door games; the latest additions to the series being "Carving," "Cribbage," and "Parlour Magic."

The Three Little Friends and Little Folks.—

These two books for young children consist each of twenty pictures by Oscar Pletsch, a German artist of considerable celebrity; with explanatory text in prose and verse. These sketches of children and their amusements, occupations, little tempers, and peculiarities, are, however, so thoroughly characteristic and graphic as to require little or no assistance of a literary kind. Every picture tells its own story in the most charming and unmistakable manner, and is drawn and engraved with a naturalness and refinement refreshing to witness. Some of our modern English draughtsmen and engravers will do well to purchase these volumes, not as presents for their children, but as models for their own study. They will there see how superior to their own repulsive blacks and whites, their harsh outlines and their unmeaning scratchy efforts, are the delicate greys and exquisite half-tones of these woodcuts. As gift-books for children, we know of none superior to the "Little Friends" and "Little Folks" of Oscar Pletsch; the cuts and text of which are printed by Messrs. Dalziel.

Warne's Illustrated Packets.—These consist of sixpenny packets of cards, the three before us being "Compliments and Mottoes," such as "A Merry Christmas," "A Happy New Year," "Prayers and Promises," "Proverbs," &c., each card being elegantly illuminated in chromolithography, with borders of flowers, arabesques, &c., and the reading in German text and ornamental lettering.

Gems of National Poetry. With numerous Illustrations by Tenniel, Weigall, and W. B. Scott. —Appearing in a new dress, these gems of song embellished by art, form a delightful and seasonable collection. Some of the best known among our domestic poems are here inserted, each page being decorated with a border of flowers or arabesque, and each piece headed by a sketch descriptive of its subject matter.

Several other publications by the same firm solicit and deserve remark, but we must desist, for our space is exhausted.

Tottie's Christmas Shoes. (W. S. Partridge.) —There is more of truth in this story than some people would care to admit; but it is not always that a reformed drunkard tells how he fell from respectability to vice, misery, and want, till he actually stooped to the degradation of offering the little child's shoes in exchange for gin! Nor when a man has fallen so low, does the refusal of a tavern landlady to give him further credit usually tend to reform his habits; but that Clare, the father of Tottie, is not altogether lost is shown in the sequel.

Animal Sagacity. Edited by Mrs. S. C. Hall, (Partridge.)—A handsome book, full of pretty anecdotes of dogs, cats, birds, &c., with such life-like portraits of our dumb companions and domestic pets as only Harrison Weir appears able to draw.

Washed Ashore; or, The Tower of Stourmont Bay. By W. H. Kingston. (Jackson & Walford.)—Describing shipwreck, an uninhabited island, rescue, and the wonders of the deep, Mr. Kingston, brings his boy-hero into contact with numerous strange phases of life, and ends by making him the captain of an Indian trader, which he calls the "Stourmont Tower," in memory of his rescue from the waves, by means of the light a poor woman set up on the shore, previous to the erection of a lighthouse on that part of the south coast.

THE MAGAZINES.

Miss Braddon's Belgravia has not been successful in stopping its competitor, the Vice-Chancellor saying that as the rival proprietors had both been wrong, he would not give the right of exclusive publication to either Mr. Maxwell or Messrs. Hogg. Consequently, there are still two Belgravias in the field. Miss Braddon has achieved a success, and a deserved one: the quantity of matter and the number of illustrations rendered it the cheapest shilling magazine published. Miss Braddon's own story, "Birds of Prey," was alone sure to attract a large number of readers; but besides this, the varied table of contents was such as to please every taste. The press has been all but unanimous in praise of the Magazine; and grateful for this, and perhaps for coming favours of like character, the proprietor recently gave a grand dinner at the Langham Hotel to one-half of the editorial brotherhood of London.

The other Belgravia.—Messrs. Hogg and Sons announce that "the programme for the coming year will embrace many attractive features, arrangements being in progress to place the editorial management in the hands of a popular novelist, who will be assisted by the leading authors and artists of the day."

London Society fully maintains its character as an elegant drawing-room companion, and has found its way into more private houses than almost any other magazine of the day. It has also been found sufficiently attractive in the United States to demand a special edition for that country. It has a famous programme for 1867.

Christian Society (Groombridge) furnishes a pleasing variety of matter for Sunday reading. It reminds us of the "Churchman's Family Magazine" in its best days, many of its articles bearing a family likeness to those which appeared in the "Churchman."

The Churchman's Family Magazine will in future be published by Messrs. Houlston and Wright. How it will be conducted, or by whom, and what it will contain, we know not.

The Sunday Magazine, edited by Dr. Guthrie, for January, contains:—"The Huguenot Family in the English Village," by the author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "Star Showers in Scripture Times," by the Rev. Robert Hunter; "Studies from the Old Testament," by the Editor. "The Seven Consciences, with Cases in Point," by John de Liefede. "Peter Martyr," "How to use the Epistles, by the Dean of Canterbury," "Luther the Singer," II., by the Author of "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood." "The Metaphors of St. Paul," by J. S. Howson, D.D. "The Lawyer's Opportunities of Doing Good," by Andrew Whitgift; and quite a number of other papers.

Good Words commences the New Year well, George Macdonald contributes four chapters of a new story, "Guild Court," the scene of which is laid in London. The President of the Astronomical Society has a paper on the meteoric shower of November. Dean Alford, undeterred by Mr. Moon, tells us "More about the Queen's English;" other pleasant papers follow; and lastly we have some reminiscences of "King Arthur's Land," by the author of "John Halifax."

The Argosy has commenced a new tale, "The History of Robert Falconer," by an anonymous author. A bumptious article, written in the worst possible taste by E. H. Palmer, M.A.; some verses which the editor has mistaken for poetry; a good gossiping paper, "The Mary Jane's forecastle;" "Shoemakers' Village;" a pretty story by Henry Holbeach; and two or three shorter pieces are in the number for January.

The Contemporary Review goes far to supply a long-felt want—a learned and thoughtful review of books and things which cannot be treated with sufficient attention in the ordinary monthly magazines. That the Contemporary does not quite do this is to some extent due to the vanity of contributors who are pleased to see their own names, and their own personal opinions in print.

Readers of Macmillan's Magazine will have seen with regret the intimation in the January number that Mrs. Norton has again been prevented by illness from continuing her "Story of Old Sir Douglas." Lord Hobart, Major Noot, Mr. F. T., and Mr. W. G. Palgrave, contribute papers; and Mr. Kingsley's tale, "Silcote of Silcotes," is continued.

The Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine is now published by Messrs. Ward, Lock, & Tyler. It combines a Magazine of Fashion, containing coloured plates and patterns, with a Magazine of Literature,—both useful and amusing.

The Popular Science Review (Hardwicke), published quarterly, is a work that deserves to be widely known; it is edited by Dr. Henry Lawson, and numbers among its contributors nearly all the scientific men of note. It is peculiarly valuable, as giving a quarterly summary of scientific progress.

The Philatelist, a new illustrated magazine, just commenced by Messrs. Stafford, Smith, & Co., of Brighton, is devoted entirely to the interests of postage-stamp collectors.

The Intellectual Observer every month contains a large quantity of scientific information, conveyed in a popular form. Many of the illustrations are printed in colours, and special attention is given to microscopic investigation.

The Penny Post comes out in a new dress, enlarged one-third, and printed on toned paper. It contains some pretty illustrations.

The Churchman's Companion, which, like the preceding, is circulated chiefly amongst high Churchmen, is also enlarged by sixteen additional pages.

The Monthly Packet, edited by the author of the "Heir of Redcliffe," is a great favourite with the persons it is intended for, viz., younger members of the English Church, for whose "Evening Readings" no better work can be named. Miss Yonge commences a new story, "The Mystery of the Cavern," in the January part.

The Magazine for the Young (Mozley's) still maintains its place as a sort of juvenile Monthly Packet; the twelve numbers for the year make a nice little volume, and cheap withal.

Routledge's Magazine for Boys commences the new year well. The "Orville College Boys," by Mrs. Henry Wood; "Hints on Sports and Pastimes;" "A Nautical Story," and some scientific articles, make up a capital number.

The Victoria Magazine battles nobly for woman's rights. Attempts to make women think for themselves; supplies them with motives to self-reliance; and, at the same time supplies them with a considerable amount of interesting reading of a more general character.

The Household (Groombridge) is a good twopennyworth for young housewives, helping them to some useful information in a chatty, agreeable manner.

The Floral World (Groombridge), edited by Mr. Shirley Hibberd, is a cheap Garden Guide, well stored with information for amateurs.

The Gardener, of which No. 1. makes its appearance this month, is a continuation of the "Scottish Gardener." The aim of the editor is to make it useful to that large and increasing class of the community who, previous to the development of our railway system, lived in cities, but who now live in the country, and who occupy their hours of relaxation of city business in managing, either with or without the aid of a man, their suburban gardens. The work is edited by Mr. W. Thompson, of Dalkeith Gardens, and is published by Messrs. Blackwood.

The Naturalists' Note Book is a new journal, same size as "Notes and Queries," to be published monthly at fourpence.

The Imperial Review is announced. It is to be a Conservative journal, published weekly.

Old Merry's Annual. (Jackson & Walford.)—The twelve monthly numbers of "Merry and Wise" make an attractive Annual for young readers. Its contents include two complete stories, numerous articles on natural history, various sketches by "Old Merry" himself; essays, riddles, accounts of popular games, poems, extracts from new books, &c. These are plentifully illustrated with wood-engravings, the volume being prefaced by a chromo-lithograph of boys making a snow giant.

Mr. Anthony Trollope issues his latest novel in weekly sixpenny numbers, instead of monthly parts, and his departure from the orthodox mode of publication seems to be well received by his readers. In The Last Chronicle of Barset he takes us over the old familiar ground by a new route; and we are once more brought into pleasant companionship with Bishop Proudie, Lord Lufton, Dean Arabin, Archdeacon Grantley, and his daughter Griselda (now Marchioness of Hartlelop), and most of the other people who figured in "Framley Parsonage;" together with the Rev. Mr. Crawley and his wife, and some new characters, who promise to become important and interesting actors in the domestic drama, the first scenes of which are here revealed. Poor, half-demented Mr. Crawley is introduced to us under very suspicious circumstances, for he is more than suspected of having stolen, or wrongly appropriated, a cheque which had been given by Lord Lufton to his man of business; at the same time Major Grantley (now a widower) is in love with Crawley's daughter, and is driven, by the opposition of his father, the Archdeacon, and the haughty sneers of his sister, the Marchioness, to propose sooner than he would have done; and poor Mrs. Grantley, "who had not much comfort from her children's visits," is once more made the unwilling centre of a domestic plot, which looks as if it would carry its readers to the end of the story.

The Musical Directory for 1867, Rudall, Rose, & Co., is a very model for all Almanack and Directory compilers. It gives all possible information respecting the musical profession, and by confining itself to what it professes, is able to do this at a very moderate price.

Lebanon Leaves (E. Palmer) are "Metrical Soliloquies on passages from Holy Scripture," and, like a previous volume, appeared in the pages of a religious magazine with which their author was editorially connected. The specimens of blank verse which bear this fanciful title are two hundred and thirty-seven in number, each one being an amplification of a Scriptural text.

Daily Bible Illustrations. By John Kitto, D.D. New edition, revised and enlarged by J. L. Porter, D.D. Morning Series, 2 vols. 12s. (Edinburgh: Oliphant.)—Dr. Kitto's well-known "Bible Illustrations" now appear in a new edition. The text of the original work remains intact; but as, since the book was written, various important discoveries have been made in the geography and antiquities of Eastern lands, and considerable advances have taken place in Biblical interpretation, the results of such researches are given in notes, so as to bring up the work to the present state of Biblical knowledge. This plan has its advantages, inasmuch as in a simple revision of the text of a book, it is usually rather difficult to distinguish between the work of the original writer and that of the new editor. Dr. Kitto's method, in his "Bible Illustrations," was one of great simplicity. He took the Scriptures in regular course, and discussed the subjects as they arose: a chapter or portion for each day in the week—illustrating the matter in hand with wood engravings, when it seemed desirable; explaining as he went on such of the customs, manners, and habits of the ancient Hebrews and Egyptians as were referred to in the portion of Scripture under consideration; refraining, as far as possible, from the discussion of those points of theology on which Biblical controversialists usually differ. The two volumes before us are severally devoted to the "Antediluvians and the Patriarchs," and "Moses and the Judges." Dr. Kitto took a perfectly sound and clear view of his own labours. His work, he said (in the preface to his second volume, first published in 1850), was "not a history, not a commentary, not a book of critical or antiquarian research; not one of popular illustration, nor of practical reflection; but something of all these:" what in his plain way the author had been able to make it,—a work which might promote an intelligent apprehension of the Sacred Book, and contribute to encourage a habit not merely of reading it, but of thinking over its contents.

Little Ladders to Learning (Routledge) is a capital book for children; for it contains questions and answer upon an immense variety of subjects, each illustrated with a graphic woodcut of the article described. Each column has a picture and its explanatory text. These together embrace the principal things to be found in every house; what we eat and drink, animals and their uses, birds and their nests, fishes and frogs; butterflies and all other insects; town and country scenes and employment; how things are made; soldiers and sailors, and the world and its inhabitants—in all about 750 engravings and many thousands of useful facts, which may be read by little ladies and gentlemen not yet in their teens, with the certain prospect of ultimate profit to them when they grow into men and women.

Flower-de-Luce. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. (Routledge. 1s.)—This minute collection of Longfellow's latest poetical pieces may be accepted by the public in lieu of a more pretentious volume. Though the poem which gives its name to this book consists of only thirty-two lines, the lines themselves are full of beauty and harmony. But the gem of the collection is the monody on Nathaniel Hawthorne—a touching and exquisite little poem. Longfellow tells us how he went wandering, as one in a trance, across the meadows, by the old grey manse, meeting familiar faces, but missing the one face that he knew so well.

The New American Edition of Burke's Works. (Boston: Little, Brown, & Co.)—Edmund Burke must be regarded in two distinct lights. He was a man of letters and a politician; or rather, he was a literary politician. In both capacities he gained much applause during his lifetime, and the echo of that applause still rings in our ears. His fame is enormously great. As a statesman, he is classed by some higher than any of his contemporaries in Parliament. His speeches, although not always listened to with that interest which was manifested by a crowded house towards Pitt, Fox, or Sheridan, were admittedly of the highest order. Fox, as great a plagiarist as Mirabeau, used to learn his pamphlets by heart, and dressing them up with his impassioned eloquence, would deliver them in the house as his own. In literature, also, he produced books which brought him extravagant praise. The few works he wrote were esteemed marvellous for the insight they exhibited, and the profound views of society and of human nature they were thought to unfold. Nor did he occupy a second place in the social and intellectual circles of the age. He could hold his own with Johnson, the best talker of the day; could discuss on equal terms with Reynolds, the best painter of the day, the highest principles of his art; was able to elucidate, when Paoli failed, the plan of a campaign, or describe the results of a military defeat. He was more than an admirable Crichton. And yet, by ourselves he is believed to have been an overrated man. The nineteenth century is, in his case, disposed to reverse the verdict of the eighteenth. He is talked of more than read. His parliamentary speeches are too ornate, too much encumbered with tropes, too long-winded, for our taste. His views of art are considered ill-founded, and the principles which he advocated are utterly discredited. None of his social triumphs are remembered; no repartee or bon-mot, traceable to him, is current in society or in the world. Even his famous prediction with respect to the effects of the French Revolution, which at one time was considered the happiest instance of vaticination, is now regarded in another light by an age which is able to perceive that "There is some soul of goodness in things evil," and that he who is able to foretell a thunderstorm will follow, from gathering clouds and lowering sky, but is unable to foresee that electrical equilibrium follows, cannot be regarded as a true prophet. Burke, however, is a representative man, and all students of history, of art, or social manners, must make acquaintance with his productions. And the periodical publication of a new edition of his works is proof that they do not neglect the study. The last edition which has come before us is that just published at Boston, in America, by Little, Brown, and Co. This is not only interesting, as showing the popularity of Burke in America, but it is in itself by far the best and most complete edition which has ever appeared. We have before us the eighth volume, which contains the articles of impeachment against Warren Hastings, and the ninth and eleventh report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the affairs of India. This, of course, is not such agreeable reading as some of the other volumes furnish, and, consequently, will be less critically examined. We have in it, however, the means of effectually testing the value of the edition. Before us lies a list of some of the principal mistakes occurring in previous editions and corrected in this. It is impossible for us to detail the entire list, as it contains no fewer than eighty or ninety items.

Some of these corrections are of the utmost importance. For instance, in the editions of 1813, 1819, and 1852, we read "favour alone did not stand in the place," which is here restored to "favour alone stood in the place." Again, in the edition published in 1852, we read "who was sent out of the limits," which is here correctly restored to "who was then out of the limits." The number of misprints, false dates, and omissions of words are so numerous in all previous editions, that we wonder they were not sooner exposed. The service rendered to politics and English literature by the publishers cannot be over estimated, and in giving our testimony of the merits of this edition, we half regret that it is to our transatlantic cousins—and not to our own men of letters—that we must offer our thanks. The work is admirably printed with clear type on toned paper. Henceforth it cannot fail to be the standard edition of the works of Burke.

AN ENGLISH PRIMER.—Compiled under the superintendence of Edward C. Lowe, D.D., Head Master of St. John's School, Hurstpierpoint. Brighton: G. Wakeling. London: Jas. Parker & Co.—The value of a work like this obviously depends as much upon the plan of its arrangement as upon the nature of its contents. The less abstruse subject should precede the more abstruse; some intelligible method of arrangement should be pursued; there should be logical sequence. "An English Primer" does not quite fulfil any of those requirements. It is defective in plan and in subject-matter. Even the title is a misnomer. The object of the compilers, according to their own felicitously-expressed Preface, is to secure throughout a large school a "certain amount of useful knowledge under four important heads," being learned by heart, and engrained on the memory by frequent repetition." We fear there is little chance of the compilers living to see their object attained. The "certain amount of useful knowledge" to be learned by heart is so badly arranged that we do not believe it possible for the most precocious youth to "engrain it" on his memory. The four important heads under which this matter is classed are Religious Instruction, Arithmetic, Euclid, History and Geography, and the Mother Tongue. It might be thought by those unacquainted with the plan of instruction adopted at St. John's School, Hurstpierpoint, that a boy, if it were only for the sake of not being eccentric, should know his letters before he learns off the Apostle's Creed or reads a chapter in the Bible. That, at least, is our opinion. To judge from this Primer, however, such is not universally the case. We open the little volume, and after reading a few psalms and learning half-a-dozen Latin graces, we turn over the leaves, when, towards the end of the book, we discover that "the alphabet is the name given to the list of letters," and that "there are twenty-six letters in the English alphabet." It is the same in other sections. Under the important head, "History and Geography," we thought that the latter should precede the former; that is, should be known what and where England is, before the most important civil and military events that have been transacted therein are recorded. On referring to the Primer, however, we find that we were wrong. We find that Britain was invaded by Julius Cæsar B.C. 53 (sic); and it is only afterwards we learn that Great Britain is an island, and has length and breadth. We infer from the Preface that this method of imparting information is new and original. In a very luminous passage the complers announce that their production "is to be regarded as only one among many other useful books, supplying, however, more immediately than they the wants of the particular school, by whose master it is compiled, by which word, furthermore, it must be understood that so far as matter is concerned, little or no claim is laid to originality. If any such claim [as what] can be maintained, it can be only on the ground of form." If, then, on the ground of form a claim upon originality should be advanced, and our opinion of its value asked, we find it quite impossible to say whether we approved the plan adopted in this volume, inasmuch as we have not yet got used to the new method of arrangement, and might probably be unduly prejudiced in favour of the old. We will not, therefore, pronounce judgment. With respect, however, to the matter, we can speak with more confidence. The selection under each heading is not only badly made, but contains errors of omission and commission we were surprised to find in a work published by masters of a school of repute. Some of the information furnished is rather doubtful. We are told, for instance, that the House of Commons is an elective body, "chosen by the citizens of boroughs and the freeholders of counties," but we are not told that others besides citizens and freeholders have a share in returning members to the House. We are told that Dublin is the only University in Ireland, and are not told that there is a University in Stephen's Green, or that the Queen's Colleges contribute another. We are told that the earth "hangs in the firmament with the air all about it, as a ball might hang in water;" and "centripetal" force is well explained as the effect of the law of gravitation; but when we ask for information respecting "centrifugal" force, "the answer is this: when the earth was created, God caused it in some way unknown to us to move." In every section, indeed, there is much to condemn and more to be corrected. We cannot believe "An English Primer" will supply the wants of any other than "the particular school by whose masters it was compiled." The publication of the work, however, satisfies us on one point—that there is a school in England with a University man at its head capable of issuing a work which, had we not ourselves seen it, we should have thought it impossible for any adult to have produced.

MESSRS. NELSON'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

During the last few days Messrs Nelson have added to their list of newly-published books, most of them adapted for youthful readers, and all of them resplendent in gay binding and appropriate illustration. Besides the volumes already noticed in our Christmas number, the following deserve brief notice at our pen:—The Draytons and the Davenants, a story of the Civil War, supposed to be told in a New England farm-house by a descendant of the Puritan fathers. In this story the author of the "Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," goes over the well-trodden ground with a light and cheerful pen, and tells of Cromwell and Hampden, the establishment of the American colonies, and the fatal obstinacy of Charles Stuart, in that acceptable diary form which she and Miss Manning have made so popular; intermingling national events with domestic incidents in a very natural and attractive style.

The Triumph over Midian, by Gideon is an attempt by A. L. O. E. to illustrate the history of the victory of Gideon by means of a series of lectures supposed to be read by a father to his family; which lectures are interwoven into the web of a pretty domestic story. A steel plate, representing Gideon at the Camp of the Midianites, forms the frontispiece to the volume.

The Dark Year of Dundee is a tale of the Scottish Reformation, in which fact and fiction are very happily blended; the scope of the narrative being entirely religious.

The Sunday Chaplet is a collection of short stories and poems adapted for Sunday reading; the separate pieces being culled from the "Children's Paper," a religious periodical published in America.

The Story of a Happy Little Girl is one that most girls will like, for it tells of the comfort that comes of contentment, and the prize that is won by obedience; and this, too, through the medium of an interesting narrative of home joys and occupations.

The Holiday Chaplet is a book of stories for young people—stories interesting in themselves, but which are all written with a purpose—that of teaching the value of honesty, truth, trustworthiness, and piety.

Old Gems Re-set consist of a dozen tales for youth—some of them, "The Cross of the Legion of Honour," "How to take a City," and the "Message in the Letter," for instance, having already appeared in other forms of publication, but all of them worth re-producing.

Nineveh and its Story is an account of recent discoveries in Assyria, compiled, by permission, from the works of Mr. Layard and Sir H. Rawlinson, by Mr. Jones; and illustrated by engravings of winged bulls, and other curious figures familiar to visitors to the British Museum and the Crystal Palace.

Pictures of Natural History, a series of well-drawn, and highly-coloured, portraits of lions, tigers, zebras, goats, swans, &c., with an explanatory text in large readable type.

Comical Creatures, and Funny Animals, are two books for the nursery, each consisting of twenty-two large-page illustrations printed in colours, very amusing and singular, with verses to match. Little folks will laugh over the adventures of "Mister Fox," and the "Kitten Cousins," "Pussey's Tea-party," and the "Weasel Family;" the air of human intelligence given by the artist to the faces of the animals being quite equal to any demands that may be made on the credulity of little readers. It is surprising how quickly children learn to comprehend this kind of pictorial joke.

The Boy makes the Man is a book of anecdotes and examples, by W. H. D. Adams, in which the usual plan of giving biographies of eminent men has been wisely departed from, and that of the "Pursuit of Knowledge under Difficulties" adopted. By this plan we get, under such headings as "Perseverance and its Results," "Early Piety," &c., numerous anecdotes of various men of diverse occupations and position in life, not altogether to the exclusion of those who were clever and un-successful.

The old Augsburg Gazette, following the example of its Cologne contemporary, is about to appear as a weekly paper, in addition to its daily issues; of course, with the inevitable feuilleton at the foot of its political and news columns.

Longfellow's Poems.—Judging from the number and variety of editions, we may fairly say that Professor Longfellow is the most popular poet of the day. Thousands of people in this country who have never heard a line of Tennyson's can repeat whole poems of Longfellow's. Miles Standish is as well known here as in America, and there are no short poems by any modern English authors, if we except one or two of Keble's hymns, that are so often recited as "Excelsior" and the "Psalm of Life." This popularity is due in the first place to the merit of the writings themselves. We do not now discuss their poetical merit, which may be high or low, or only of a very mediocre character, but they have the merit of pleasing, and of pleasing readily; but the great cause of Longfellow's popularity arises from the unrestricted manner in which his poems have been circulated in this country. A dozen publishers have issued editions as varied in price as in excellence. Two, both illustrated, are now before us: the first, from Messrs Bell and Daldy, has nearly 250 engravings on wood from designs by Birket Foster, John Gilbert, John Absolon, G. H. Thomas, &c.—an elegant guinea volume printed on toned paper. The other from Messrs. Warne, forms the first of their series of "Chandos Poets"—so named after the Chandos Press. It is a remarkably well-printed crown octavo volume of about 650 pages, with a red border line round each, with several full-page illustrations, and a steel plate portrait from a recent photograph.

Outline Facts of Chemistry. By T. Ward. Parts I. and II. (Simpkin & Marshall.)—Intended chiefly to serve the purpose of a note-book for young students in chemistry, this treatise is rather descriptive than elementary. Presuming that the pupil has at least some knowledge of chemical apparatus and manipulation, no space is wasted in giving an account of either, but the volume properly begins with a table of definitions, which is followed by clearly written descriptions of the various non-metallic elements, as oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, &c.; then the metals and their classification, table of weights and measures, exercises, &c., concluding with a well-compiled index. The new chemical notation and nomenclature have been adopted throughout; and with Fahrenheit's scale, a table is annexed, to enable students to convert the degrees into centigrades.

Tufts of Heather from the Northern Moors.—By Edwin Waugh. (Simpkin & Marshall.)—Having made a reputation as a poet, Mr. Waugh now tries his "prentice hand" at prose, and succeeds. In this handsome volume we have seven tales, in the Lancashire dialect principally, of the domestic life, trials, and experiences of the people in and about the cotton-manufacturing districts. We have read the first story, "Besom Ben," with great interest; and from the glance we have taken of the other six tales, we can fairly congratulate their author upon having written a thoroughly entertaining and valuable book. We will not spoil the reader's pleasure by attempting to epitomise the plots of these pleasing narratives.

Rough Diamonds, by John Hollinshead (Routledge), is hardly up to the author's mark, but the tales are interesting, as pictures of life among the lower classes, and are written without coarseness, though some read like the rough plots for farces—one especially, the "Phantom Genius," an absurd adventure of an old gentleman in search of the birthplace of the "immortal Pothooks."

The Horse; his Beauties and Defects. By a Knowing Hand. Imp. 8vo. (Tegg.)—Notwithstanding all that has been written about that noble animal, the horse,—intimate association with which sometimes appears strangely to affect the honour and honesty of that nobler animal, man,—there is much information to be derived from the present volume. In addition to various portraits of the horse, his separate parts—as the head, the fore-legs, the hind-legs, the barrel, the neck, the flank, &c.—are distinctly figured in coloured lithograph, and as distinctly explained in the text, which discusses the animal's different merits and defects. The last chapter contains numerous hints to inexperienced purchasers, and puts them on their guard against the tricks of knavish dealers.

Songs of Praise: containing a Hundred and Forty-two Hymns, Chants, Anthems, and Doxologies, with appropriate Tunes, arranged for Three Voices; and Accompaniments for the Pianoforte. (Paisley: J. & R. Parlane. London: Houlston.)—The title of this collection of tunes and words completely describes the character of the volume, which is a very good specimen of provincial music printing. Among authors, of lesser fame we find Milton, Bishop Heber, Dr. Watts, Luther, Cowper, C. Wesley, and the Rev. J. Curwen. Many of our old favourites have been re-harmonized, frequently to the advantage of both player and singer.

Poems, Descriptive and Lyrical, by Thomas Cox (Hall & Co.), a second series of verses, pleasant to read, from the fact that they are poems and not mere platitudes with rhyming words at the ends of the lines.

The Art of Wood-engraving (Winsor & Newton) is a shilling manual by Mr. T. Gilks. As a means of initiating amateurs into the mysteries of wood-engraving, this little book is not without value; for it is practical and explanatory, and contains woodcuts of the implements employed in the art, and elementary directions for its pursuit; together with several specimen blocks, showing the way in which a finished wood-engraving is produced.

Gerty and May. (Griffith and Farran.)—The sayings and doings of the children in this little book are such as may be really said and done by young people every day. The story of the two sisters, Gertrude and May, is naturally told, and well illustrated.

Peter of the Castle; and The Fetches. By the O'Hara Family. New edition. With an Introduction and Notes by Michael Banim, Esq. 12mo. 2s. (Dublin: Duffy.)—These two popular stories have been added to the National Edition of the works of the Brothers Banim. Like the others in the series, it has an introduction and explanatory notes by the survivor of the two original writers. The "Fetches" is, perhaps, best known to English readers from the dramatic version of Mr. Falconer; but the story now reprinted contains many more incidents than were introduced into the play.

Church Melodies arranged for Four Voices: a Book for the Service of Song in the House of the Lord. By the Rev. Andrew Henderson, of Paisley. (Paisley: J. and R. Parlane.)—This collection consists of upwards of two hundred and fifty psalm and hymn tunes, many of them new and copyright, and many more old and admired—neatly printed in the old notation, from music-types of an unusually plain and easily-read character. In numerous instances the harmonies have been revised, and a capital double index accompanies the volume.

Warwickshire Arms and Lineages, by the Rev. Fred. W. Kittermaster (Macintosh).—This little volume will prove an acceptable work of reference for all who are interested in the local history and antiquities of Warwickshire. It shows clearly and methodically, in alphabetical order, what families belong to the old gentry were resident in the county before the year 1650, and who their present representatives are. The information is mainly derived from records of the various visitations made from time to time, between 1412 and 1686, by the Heralds, under the authority of the Earl of Warwick; so that it may be confidently relied upon for its accuracy. An Appendix, too, has been given of some families who now live in the county, and bear arms, but whose names do not occur in the older visitations.

Songs of the Nativity: being Christmas Carols, Ancient and Modern, several of which appear now for the first time in a Collection. Edited, with Notes, by William Henry Husk, Librarian to the Sacred Harmonic Society (Hotten).—Christmas-carol singing, once so universally prevalent throughout the entire length and breadth of the land, is a custom that now for a long time has been on the wane. "Fifty years ago," says Dr. Husk, "carols were beginning to be spoken of as 'not belonging to this century'; thirty years back they were even said to be 'still sung during the festive season in many parts of the country, though now seldom heard in the metropolis.'" But they had begun to decline long before that time. The Reformation dealt them a blow they never recovered, and the Puritans, in the time of Cromwell, deprived them of all vital force. Those who desire to possess a collection of these curious poems, which are representatives of customs fast becoming only "memories," will find in these "Songs of the Nativity" a not unwelcome present. The volume has been compiled with a view to place before the reader a selection of all the choicest productions of the kind, ancient and modern, the materials having been drawn from the most varied sources, ancient MSS., early printed books, rare musical works, old almanacs, and, in no small degree, from the common broadsides of the cheap press. The collection is well edited, and has been admirably printed at the Chiswick Press.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, & Galpin have added "My First Cruise," a tale of adventure, by W. H. Kingston, to their "Story-books for the Young," a series of shilling volumes in which such writers as William and Mary Howitt, Mrs. Henry Wood, Miss Meteyard (Silverpen) and Mrs. De Morgan have already made an appearance. "My First Cruise" is followed by "The Chimæra" of the late Nathaniel Hawthorne, and a couple of shorter American tales, all prettily illustrated.

The Bible Story Book (Jackson and Walford) consists of numerous Scripture narratives by the Rev. B. H. Draper, in simple language, illustrated with wood engravings. As this is its fifteenth edition, the book has passed beyond the reach of criticism.

Mary and her Mother (Jackson and Walford) is a series of Scripture narratives intended for very young children. The several stories are told in the form of conversations between a mother and her little daughter.

Hans Christian Andersen's Stories for the Household (Routledge). A series of Andersen's charming tales for children, translated by Mr. Dulcken, and illustrated by more than two hundred engravings by the Dalziels.

The Anatomy of Foliage: Photographed examples of the Principal Forest Trees each taken in winter and summer, enabling the student to trace the limbs when hidden by masses of foliage. Arranged by Thomas Hatton, photographed by Edward Fox.—It was a happy idea of Mr. Hatton to represent the same tree under two aspects—as it appears clothed with luxurious vegetation, and bare of external covering—"ruined quires where late the sweet birds sang." And his idea has been well carried out. He has already given us photographs of the oak, the elm, the sycamore, and the horse chestnut, and now presents us with the Spanish chestnut. The specimens selected, which may be considered typical of their species, is from Buxted Park, Sussex, and give an accurate notion of the trees in both conditions. Such a series is of great value to the landscape painter, and we can only suggest, as an improvement, that the same specimens should be represented in Spring and Autumn. The photographs are admirably taken.

The Story of Jesus in Verse. By Edwin Hodder, sm. 4to. (Jackson and Walford).—"Children," says Mr. Hodder, "love a jingle of words. . . . Nursery rhymes outline nursery story-books. So deep are the impressions made by poetry, that aged men and women can repeat scores of hymns and rhymes which have retained firm hold upon memory from childhood, when all else has perished. It has seemed strange to me that no consecutive series of stories, illustrating the life of Jesus has, so far as I am aware, been written in verse. I made the attempt, therefore, because I believe it is desirable that the attempt should be made." The present volume is the result, and we are glad to be able to say that the result is not unsuccessful, the verses following the events in the life of the Saviour with great exactness, and the principal scenes in the sacred story being illustrated with whole page engravings.

The Elcheater College Boys. By Mrs. Henry Wood.—This is the first of a series of "Shilling Story Books for Boys," issued by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, in small octavo volumes, neatly bound. Of course Mrs. Wood's story is after the pattern of "East Lynne," and describes the sayings and doings of the boys at Elcheater College; and, equally of course, the story is exceedingly interesting. A "Christmas Story," by T. S. Arthur, and a couple of sketches by Fanny Fern, are included, as make-weights, in the same cover.

The Select School and Family Library. (Macintosh, 10s. 6d.)—A very pretty set of little books for boys and girls, all of one size, with appropriate frontispieces, and enclosed in a neat paper box. When the lid is taken off and placed at the back of the box, the dozen bright covers with gold backs show well as a miniature library of entertaining reading. One book is a sample of the whole. Take "Grandfather's Watch, and How it Went," for instance. We begin to read and discover, equally to our surprise and gratification, that the story is not only well told, but really very useful in giving readers a good deal of information in an attractive manner. The same may also be said of the remaining volumes of the series.

Cosmopolitan Sketches (H. Holloway) consist of fifteen rapidly written and not unattractive London scenes, constructed on the model furnished by Mr. Dickens in his "Sketches by Boz," and reprinted by their author, J. B. Hopkins, from the Cosmopolitan newspaper, in which they first appeared.

Manchester in Holiday Dress.—Mr. Richard Wright Procter, the author of the "Barber's Shop," is actually a Manchester barber, who adds to his income the profits of a "circulating library," and indulges his leisure by the production of books, which in a literary sense, are decidedly above mediocrity. The topics about which he pleasantly gossips in this, his latest volume, are numerous and interesting. The dawning of the drama in his native city, reminiscences of popular actors, the successes of George Alexander Stevens, whose "Lecture on Heads" was an early specimen of that class of monologue which we now term an "Entertainment;" Philip Astley and his circus; the reception in the cotton metropolis of various stars of the London stage; the Macready dynasty; the dawn of Wesleyan Methodism in Lancashire; and various noteworthy incidents connected with the modern rise and progress of Manchester as the centre of a great manufacturing industry. "It has been my endeavour," he says, "to present a vivid picture of the cotton metropolis," during his intervals of rest and recreation, "when the machinery has hushed its rumbling, the volumes of smoke have ceased to suffocate the lieges, and the spirit of trade has yielded its stronghold to the genius of frolicsome fun. Preferring the notes issued by the orchestra to the notes commencing 'three months after date,' I have willingly left the commercial element to others, and have loitered among the pleasanter by-paths of our history, which the more formal historians have rarely turned aside to tread." This little extract will give a good notion of Mr. Procter's easy and genial style, and we may dismiss the work with the remark that no more characteristic book than "Manchester in Holiday Dress" has yet issued from the Manchester press.

Lyrical Thoughts. (Seton & Mackenzie, Edinburgh.)—A little book of verses, many of which are happily conceived and poetically expressed, especially those of a religious tendency. Having already produced a volume, the "Pole-Star of Faith," which was accepted with favour, the author was tempted to again enter the lists; and, from these specimens of his powers, we are disposed to think he will not be disappointed with his reception.

The Dole of Malaga; an Episode of History. Dramatized by Digby P. Starkey. (Cassell.)—There is considerable power of versification displayed by the author of this dramatic poem; though possibly had he chosen a subject somewhat better known than the siege of Malaga, by Ferdinand and Isabella, in 1487, he would have obtained a larger circle of readers. For many, however, the long trial of strength between the Spaniards and the Moors is a very attractive page in history.

Victorian Enigmas, or Windsor Fireside Researches. (Lockwood and Co.)—It seems that an enigma or double acrostic, said to have been written by the Queen for the amusement of her children, came into the hands of Miss Charlotte Eliza Capel; and she, rightly supposing that the kind of riddle which delighted royalty would have attractions for ordinary people, set herself to work, and produced a series of acrostics enigmatically propounded on historical, biographical, geographical, and other subjects, with the intention of combining amusement with the attainment of general knowledge. Double acrostics are just now the most popular form of riddle, and in this volume they appear in all varieties.

Ten Miles from Town, and other Poems. By William Sawyer. (Freeman.)—Having found an appreciative public in the pages of "Good Words," the "Cornhill Magazine," and "London Society," Mr. Sawyer now seeks a wider audience; and puts forth his modest little volume of verse without even appealing, after the manner of young poets, to the indulgence of his critics. But, in truth, he has little to fear from adverse criticism; for though he cannot be said to belong to the highest order of poets, he may fairly take his stand on the steps of Parnassus, at a respectable distance from the bottom. "Ten Miles from Town," and the other poems in this volume, are full of tenderness and thoughtful grace, without being in the least sentimental, or what is called sensational. Indeed, the tendency of Mr. Sawyer's muse is rather practical than Byronic. He does not boast of his powers, or attempt a higher flight than his Pegasus is quite capable of taking.

How Paul's Penny became a Pound. How Peter's Pound became a Penny. Each 1s. Illustrated with twelve engravings. (Seeley and Jackson.)—These stories illustrate the old proverb, "Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves," and the new axiom, "Take care of the pounds, lest the pounds become pence." We shall not deprive young readers of the pleasure of discovering how in the hands of one lad the penny increased and multiplied, and with it the self-respect and respectability of its owner, and how, with the other, the pound, unexpectedly gained, was wasted to a penny; but simply recommend the purchase of these excellent little books, and the study of the philosophy they teach.

The Sailor Crusoe. By Percy B. St. John. (Darton & Co.)—While the "Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe of York, Mariner," continue to be read and admired by all sorts of boys all over the world, imitations of that particular order of tale seem always to attain popularity. In spite of the apparent difficulty of finding new situations in which to place the new Robinson, and the sameness of incidents in which he is bound to be involved, the idea of the lonely man on the desolate island seems to possess a peculiar and lasting charm.

Wit and Humour. (Hotten, 12mo.)—The humorous poems of Oliver Wendell Holmes, the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," are here collected, with an account of the author by way of introduction. Dr. Holmes is always quaint and original, and the publication of this volume will probably introduce him to some to whom his American humour is unfamiliar. In many respects he resembles Hood—we mean the author of the "Song of the Shirt" and "Eugene Aram's Dream"—except that he wants that wonderful power of pathos which distinguished our great punster. Artemus Ward has borrowed many of his best effects from Holmes; but there is a wonderful difference between the chaste wit and classical humour of the one and the broad comic burlesque of the other.

Hugh Bryon. The Autobiography of an Irish Rebel. (Trübner, 1866. 10s. 6d.)—This volume appears at a most fitting time, and deserves to be well considered. It not only furnishes English readers with the most impartial account that has ever come to us from Ireland of the grievances under which Irishmen suppose themselves to suffer, and of the plans they adopt for ameliorating their condition, but is an admirable novel, in which the author proves himself to be at once an enlightened politician as well as an acute delineator of character.

Sparks from the Anvil. (Partridge).—This illustrated edition of the essays on various subjects, by the learned blacksmith, will be read with interest by the artisans and others for whose instruction and delight they were originally penned. In a modest preface, Elihu Burritt explains that, with few exceptions, he has left his text in the same state as when they were first written in America, before he was known to the public, and when he really wrought with the hammer instead of the pen.

How to become a Successful Engineer. (Nimmo).—To youths intending to pursue the profession of civil engineering, these chapters, on the special and technical education required will prove exceedingly valuable, since they are evidently penned by a practical hand; the author, Mr. Bernard Stuart, pointing out not only what to study, but what to avoid; and that, too, without the employment of those technicalities which are apt to disgust rather than assist the student.

Smart Sayings of Great Personages (Darton), profess to be a collection of "wit, anecdote, apothegm, and repartee, of statesmen, divines, courtiers, lawyers, actors, poets, painters, and philosophers;" the idea of the book being derived from the false and exaggerated sentiment attributed to Dr. Channing, that "one anecdote of a man is worth a volume of biography." Apart from its title, this is an amusing volume; for the "sayings" of various celebrated men and women, though not always "smart," are often clever.

Childhood in India (Jackson and Walford) is a prettily-told narrative of English child-life in the East, founded on facts that came under the notice of the writer, the wife of an officer in her Majesty's service, during her residence in India at the period of the great Sepoy mutiny.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the BOOKSELLER.

DEAR SIR,—At the request of Mr. Hardwicke, I would call your attention to an inaccuracy which has occurred in the review you were kind enough to give of my book ("The Autographic Album") in the Christmas number of THE BOOKSELLER. This work was projected and compiled by myself, in addition to the biographical notices you were pleased to commend, this latter portion of the work being far more simple than the decipherment and selection of the passages fit to form an interesting scrap for publication. I would, therefore, ask you to favour me in a future number of your magazine with a notice which will convey to the public the knowledge that Mr. Hardwicke is only the publisher. Apologising for thus troubling you,

I remain, yours respectfully,

Dec. 21, 1866.

L. W. PHILLIPS.

IS IT ACCIDENTAL?

To the Editor of the BOOKSELLER.

SIR,—We have to call your attention, and that of the trade generally, to a system which has been allowed to grow up in certain wholesale houses in Paternoster Row and its vicinity, and which has, to our certain knowledge, existed for a long time past, to the detriment of the retailer.

We refer to the fact of private individuals, no matter whom, being able at any time, without demur or question, to get books and magazines over the wholesale counters at trade price.

Whether this is allowed and sanctioned by the firms in question, or whether it arises through the too easy disposition of the assistants, we know not; but at all events, let the fault lie where it may, it is quite time some check was placed upon this loose and injurious way of doing business by which the vital interests of the retailer are so seriously affected.

We can vouch for several cases of the kind which have come immediately before us, and we believe we are not wrong in stating the system is being at the present moment extensively carried out.

We are afraid, if it is still allowed to go on, it will end in the trade being thrown open altogether at trade price to the public at large, which will inevitably entail ruin on many.

The favour of the publication of these few remarks in the next impression of your valuable medium will much oblige

Yours obediently,

S. & T. GILBERT.

OBITUARY.

Nov. 1.—Mr. William Stallworthy, Gravesend, bookseller and stationer.

Nov. 8.—At Calais, aged 40, Mr. Robert Gilbert, one of the partners in the well-known publishing house of Whittaker and Co. Mr. Gilbert was a son of Mr. R. Gilbert, the eminent printer, of St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, and nephew to Mr. Geo. B. Whittaker, on whose decease he succeeded to a share in the business in Ave Maria Lane.

Nov. 16.—At Woolwich, aged 44, Mr. John Myers Boddy, bookseller.

Dec. 9.—Aged 66, Mr. Robert Spencer, of 14, Bridgewater Square, Barbican, bookbinder.

Dec. 10.—At Highgate, aged 72, Mr. James Bain, late of No. 1, Haymarket, one of the most intelligent and most respected booksellers in London. Mr. Bain's father, we believe, was for many years in the employment of the late Sir Richard Phillips, who then carried on the business of bookmaker and bookseller. At an early age Mr. Bain commenced business in a part of London near what is now the National Gallery, but then called the Mews Gate; here, with a very small stock, he contrived by his intelligent and obliging manner to attract customers of no mean order; one, the late Mr. Goulburn, became a customer for life. Mr. Goulburn introduced Sir Robert Peel, and when that eminent man became Chief Secretary for Ireland he commissioned Mr. Bain to procure a copy of every book or pamphlet connected with the country. When the Mews Gate was pulled down, Mr. Bain removed to the Haymarket, and collected a remarkably fine stock of books, mostly of standard English literature, but with a good mixture of standard foreign authors also. The deceased was an excellent judge of the kind of book likely to sell, and was seldom wrong in the opinion he formed of the value of a book. Mr. Bain, for some time before his death, had been taking little or no share in the business, which is now in the hands of his eldest son.

Dec. 13.—At St. John's Vicarage, Leeds, aged 52, the Rev. Edward Monro, author of "Parochial Work," "The Dark River," and other allegories. Mr. Monro was well known by his educational labours at Harrow Weald.

Dec. 15.—Mrs. Phoebe Lock, widow of Mr. John Lock, civil engineer, and daughter of the late Mr. John M'Creery, printer and author.

EDITED BY THE

REV. JOHN HENRY BLUNT, M.A., F.S.A.,

The publishers venture to place this work before the Public as the most complete exposition of the Book of Common Prayer that has yet appeared. Besides the contents of an ordinary Prayer-book, this volume contains as much Illustrative matter as would fill five octavo volumes of 400 pages each.

A few copies have been printed in royal 4to, with large margin for MS. notes, price £3 3s., half-bound in morocco.

*Just Ready.MEMOIR OF COLONEL WHEELER,

(Afterwards Major-General) H.E.I.C.S.

By MAJOR H. M. CONRAN, late Bengal Artillery. With Preface by MACLEOD WYLIE, Esq.

"His name will live as long as there is British sway in India. For thirty years he preached the gospel. Never, with advancing rank and income, did he increase his expenditure upon himself, but he gave up all that he had to God. To deal out his bread to the hungry, to preach as a dying man to dying men, and to walk with God, were to him the happiness of his life."—The Watchman, Dec. 26, 1866.

"One of the most remarkable pieces of biography that has appeared for many a day. It deserves, and will surely have, thousands of readers, both in England and India."—

London Christian Times, Dec. 22, 1866.

"In small compass, and in a style well-suited to the British soldier, his old and tried yokefellow, tells the tale of his life. Hundreds upon hundreds of our army will read it, but in India most of all will the book be prized."—Christian World, Dec. 28, 1866.

"One of the most important biographies ever published, and it has been written with great skill and ability by its author. When receiving £1400 a-year, he spent £1100 of it in doing good. He fed thousands in times of famine—saved hundreds of orphans—and by his bright example showed himself a pilgrim and a stranger."—British Herald, Jan. 1, 1867.

EDUCATIONAL WORKS OF DR. CORNWELL, F.R.G.S.

The Life, Imprisonments, and Death of Manuel Matamoros, the Spanish Protestant. A Narrative of the Persecutions of Protestants in Spain in the Present Day. With particulars of the illness and last days of this lamented Spanish Confessor.

The recent lamented death of Matamoros, whose days were doubtless shortened by the rigorous imprisonment he underwent, imparts a melancholy interest to these pages, which tell of the faith and patience of himself and his fellow-witnesses for Christ. At the present time, when men are seeking for union with the Church of Rome, it is desirable to call attention to this Narrative. It shows that even in the last few years, the Church of Rome, when she has had the opportunity and the power, has proved herself as intolerant, as persecuting, as cruel, and as merciless as she was in the dark ages.

THE CHRISTMAS BOOK.

ANIMAL SAGACITY:

A Selection of Remarkable Incidents Illustrative of the Sagacity of Animals. Edited by Mrs. S. C. HALL. Illustrated after Designs by HARRISON WEIR and Others. Cloth, 5s.; cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

"Of the few books for children that have appeared this Christmas, Mrs. Samuel Carter Hall's collection of anecdotes, illustrating the sagacity of animals, is the only volume that we can recommend in enthusiastic terms for quite young children; but, though little tunic-wearing boys and short-skirted girls will derive pleasure from its well-told stories and abundance of excellent pictures by Harrison Weir, boys and girls of larger growth and stately habiliments will peruse the book with equal satisfaction. Having read and re-read every line of the entertaining and richly-embellished work, we have great pleasure in expressing our own as well as our children's gratitude for the treat which Mrs. Hall has given us; and we do hope that hundreds of English lads and lasses will take to heart the lesson which she would fain impress upon the mind of the little friend to whom she says in her dedicatory letter, 'At least, I can profit by the occasion to convey you assurance of my love, of my hope, and my faith in your future, and also my earnest prayers, that God may teach to you, and to all who are to be the hereafter of the world, the greatest lesson—that happiness can be obtained only by making others happy; and that none can be esteemed or honoured by men, or loved by God, who are not considerate and "merciful" towards the meanest thing He has created.'"—Athenæum.

OUR DUMB COMPANIONS;

Or, Stories about Dogs, Horses, Cats, and Donkeys. By the Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Rector of Stoke Newington. With Seventy-five Engravings. Printed in 4to, cloth, 5s.; extra cloth, elegantly gilt, 7s. 6d. Uniform with "Animal Sagacity."

"The book itself is as attractive in appearance as it is captivating in its contents. Three-and-twenty exquisite full-page engravings after pictures and drawings by Sir Edwin Landseer, Harrison Weir, Ansdell, Tayler, and Huard, with numerous vignettes and tailpieces, adorn the book, the paper and printing of which are sumptuous, as a volume adapted and intended as a gift or prize-book should be. Its binding, too, with a rich-coloured medallion in brilliant enamel of a spaniel's head bearing a scarlet cap, is tasteful and artistic in the extreme."—Morning Advertiser.

OUR CHILDREN'S PETS.

By JOSEPHINE. Illustrated by HARRISON WEIR and Others. Uniform with the above, Seventy Engravings, cloth, 5s.; extra cloth, elegantly gilt, 7s. 6d.

"This handsome quarto is one of the most attractive children's books we have met with during the present season, or indeed any other. It is attractive internally as well as externally, for it is full of charming little stories, sketches, and scraps of poetry, written with the view of instilling into the minds of the young consideration and love for dumb animals. The volume contains a large number of beautiful illustrations by Birket Foster, Harrison Weir, W. Hunt, J. Gilbert, and other well-known draughtsmen. The binding is exceedingly pretty, and to some extent quite novel. The young folks will certainly be delighted with 'Our Children's Pets.'"—City Press.

THE FRENCH CONSTRUCTION, with Annotations and Remarks on French
Prose Composition. By JULES FESTU.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"When the first edition of this work appeared, many professors of note, whose judgment carries great weight, openly expressed their opinions in regard to it. It is, they said, a bold and new production, which brings the student face to face before the difficulties he must overcome ere he can lay claim to a knowledge of French, pointing out, with remarkable perspicuity, the idiomatic peculiarities between the English and French Construction; handling in a masterly style all it treats upon, and solving the knotty questions connected with the moods and tenses of French Verbs. In a word, the Author dissects the French tongue with a skilful and practised hand, so that the student cannot choose but follow with pleasure and interest this linguistic course of comparative anatomy."—Ernest Brette, Head Master of the French School in Christ's Hospital, and Examiner in the London University.

BOOKS WANTED.

Letters, stating price and condition, to be forwarded to the Advertisers.

No charge being made to Subscribers for inserting a moderate number of "Wants," it is but fair that as little trouble as possible should be given, although some appear to think that they cannot give too much, and others that they cannot possibly write too badly for the printers, nor give too much trouble to the Editor by their orthographical and bibliographical blunders. The following rules should therefore be observed:—1st. No list should include more than five books. 2. The list should be written plainly, in the same manner as the "Wants" are printed. 3. No books which have been advertised for in any other publication are admissible. 4. Catalogues wanted, or Books bearing upon specific subjects mentioned generally, and not by name, or more books than five, must be paid for at the rate of sixpence each article, and stamps sent with the list. 5. Lists must be received by the 25th of the month. 6. The Editor holds himself at liberty to reject or leave out any book or list he may think proper.

 As any infraction of these rules may lead to the rejection of the entire list, and thus cause delay and disappointment, Subscribers are requested to observe this notice.

The Publisher has much pleasure in annexing copy of a letter which the Editor has received from the Rev. Dr. Duff.

"The Grange, 25th of June, 1866.

"MY DEAR MR. SMITH,—I rejoice to find, that though Mr. James Nichol, the able and spirited Publisher of the incomparable Series of Puritan Divines, under your general Editorship, has been called to his rest, the Series is to be continued under his Son.

"And I cannot help congratulating you on being able to commence the Second Section or Division of the Series with a volume of the works of so deservedly popular a writer as Thomas Brooks, the Author of 'Precious Remedies against Satan's Devices,' 'Apples of Gold for Young Men and Women,' 'Heaven on Earth,' 'Paradise Opened,' 'A String of Pearls,' 'A Cabinet of Choice Jewels,' 'A Golden Key to Open Hidden Treasures,' and other Treatises, characterised by a liveliness of fancy, a brilliancy of Wit, an exuberance of Illustration, an apt variety of learned references, a quaint felicity of expression, a skill in spiritual anatomy, a pungency of practical appeal—and all animated by the fervid zeal of sanctified genius—seldom equalled, and scarcely ever surpassed. The best cure for the Essay and Reviewisms, Colensoisms, all the other wretched neologisms and rationalisms of our day, would be the careful and prayerful study of such inestimable works as those of Thomas Brooks, and the whole glorious company of our old Puritan Divines.

"Yours ever affectionately,

"ALEXANDER DUFF."

THE CHRISTMAS BOOKSELLER.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS OF THE SEASON.

CONFESSEDLY the art of illustration has arrived at a high pitch of excellence. Shoals of books appear which, if we are to believe the critics, are so well illustrated that it is impossible to expect improvement. Every Christmas the journals are filled with praises of the inimitable pencil of one artist, of the exquisite grace of another, of the refined taste of a third, of the admirable skill of all. Book-illustrators are a thriving race. They are able to get fame and money; to drink champagne, and to become notorious. A poor man-of-letters is not half so fortunate. He writes tales and sketches that melt to sorrow, or indites leading articles that help to turn out ministries, or exposes abuses that have oppressed thousands. But he remains unknown. His name does not appear on his work. He receives halfpence, but not praise. His brother of the pencil, on the other hand, values himself and his art at a higher rate. "Jones fecit" is the pendant of everything he does. Let his work be ever so sketchy, he derives from it all the advantages that at the present day accrue from extensive advertising of his name. Smith writes a tale, or describes an event, without venturing, even if he should be permitted, to sign his production; but every announcement of the publisher informs the world that the tale or the description is "illustrated by Jones." Smith the inventor is overlooked, whilst the illustrator of his friend's invention is universally recognized. Under these circumstances—with such a stimulus to exertion as is derived from pay and praise—it might be expected that book-illustrations had reached a high state of perfection. Such, however, we regret to find, is not the case. We have before us almost every important work of the season. Toned paper, gilt edges, elegant printing, expensive binding, characterize all; but when we examine the illustrations we are disappointed. There is occasionally good drawing; the manipulation is excellent; all the technicalities of the art are displayed. For the most part, however, this is all. We look in vain for manifestations of intellect. The draughtsman seems in the first place to mistake the aim and object of the art he professes, and in the next place he displays no intelligence in carrying out his own notions on the subject. An artist is not required merely to supply pleasing pictures to a work, or to show his own skill as a draughtsman. His duty is to illustrate the text before him, to make clearer the author's meaning, to present to the eye of the reader what the text aims at presenting to his mind. He should have so mastered the subject upon which he is engaged that his perception and conception ought to be superior to that of any ordinary reader, and he should be able to seize upon and represent the salient points of the work upon which he is engaged, so as to intensify their effect. He is the author's expositor and not his rival. Seldom, however, does an artist regard himself in this light. Except when his subject is architectural or topographical, and he has the opportunity of representing a known and visible object, he gives us only the vaguest notions of the author's intentions. He does not even take the trouble of making himself acquainted with the spirit of the work upon which he is engaged. He sees the word 'church' in the text, and proceeds to give us a fancy picture of a church, or transfers to the block a portion of a picture already painted in which a picturesque church occurs. The author speaks of a 'gnarled oak,' and forthwith we are presented with a magnificent oak, admirable, perhaps as a study, but utterly useless as an illustration of the text. He is even less successful in his apprehension and representation of the sentiments, passions, and tender emotions than he is in the material objects and sensible forms of the world which he endeavours to represent. He thinks he is adhering to truth when in reality he is only confining himself to the real.

We need only take up the first costly book from the table of the first drawing-room we enter to assure ourself of the truth of these remarks. The dearth of intellectual talent among book-illustrators is amazing. The idea is thought less of than the form. Mental growth has not kept pace with technical skill, and, as a consequence, the artist has lost the place he used to occupy as a teacher. He is now admired instead of being, as formerly, respected.

At the present season these remarks may appear somewhat out of place. Our intention was to have spoken only of the merits of the works that came under our review; but the glaring defect in book-illustration to which we have alluded struck us so frequently that we could not refrain, even on this occasion, from pointing it out. We shall take an early opportunity of reverting to this subject, and of particularizing those works in which the fault is most offensively displayed.

GUSTAVE DORÉ AS A HUMOURIST.

GUSTAVE DORÉ, by common consent, occupies the first place of all the book-illustrators of our time. Competent judges differ as to the merits of this extraordinary artist; some considering him to be facile princeps in all the departments which he attempts; whilst others believe him to fail in some of the most important particulars. The truth is, both sets of critics regard the artist from different points of view. M. Gustave Doré, judging him alone from the volumes now before us, is essentially a caricaturist. He exhibits comicality in his serious attempts, and there is even something grotesque in his pathos. He has attempted all styles, but every sketch that comes from his pencil proves him to be eminently a caricaturist. He is, moreover, more unequal in his performances than any other draughtsman, and it thus happens that judgment on his merits must be pronounced not from an isolated attempt, but from a consideration of the whole work. In every estimate we form of the man, his career must be taken into account. And, in effect, this is what is done by his most ardent admirers and most violent disparagers. They may differ as to the excellences of some particular illustration; the one may characterize it as grandly grotesque, and the other as simply burlesque; but both instinctively admire character and power; and thus, without perhaps knowing why, both admire Doré, and for the same reason. In every-day life, men profess their admiration of power, when they strongly disapprove of the direction in which it tends, or the object upon which it is exercised; and, in the same way, they admire character even when exhibited by a pugilist or a prison-breaker. They wish a thing to be itself and nothing else. The possession of these qualities is, as we have intimated, the great secret of Doré's success. His drawing is frequently faulty; he trusts so much to his eye, that, although what he produces is always effective and spirited, and the general result satisfactory, were we to consider any part by itself we should doubtless detect defects from which any drawing-master's production would be free. Intellectually, too, he has the demerit of not being able to restrain himself at will. He is greatest in the half-terrible, half-imaginative subjects which come before him; but it frequently happens that he is unable to restrain his fancy—when we expect the grotesque, we are presented with burlesque instead. An examination of his "Don Quixote" will make our meaning clear. In this wonderfully beautiful volume he gives us specimens of every kind of art; he goes with skill never before exhibited by a book-illustrator.

"From grave to gay, from lively to severe,"

We have selected as a specimen of this artist's great power, his illustration of the famous scene in which Sancho appears administering justice to his supposed subjects. This scene is admirably represented, and may be taken as one of the best illustrations in the book. Sancho finds himself a judge for the first time; and when called upon to settle a knotty point of law, is fairly posed. But at last he gets out of his difficulty with his usual dexterity, and again appears as the burlesque representative of power and authority. We have so frequently referred to Messrs. Cassell's edition of "Don Quixote," that little remains to be said, other than that the volume is one of the handsomest which the season has produced.

Two Hundred Humorous and Grotesque Sketches, by Gustave Doré. (4to. 7s. 6d. Warne.) These drawings were, we believe, contributed long ago by M. Doré to various Parisian Journaux pour Rire, and are amongst the very earliest he produced. Most men in their first attempts give us, if ever so slightly, some sign of the direction of their genius. We are enabled to detect indications of the bent of their minds. The child is thought to be father of the man. Such, however, is not the case in the present instance. The Doré of these sketches is not the Doré of the Dante and the Don Quixote. We miss the gloomy grandeur which characterizes his illustration of the Divine Comedy, and the mock-heroism with which his pencil has so admirably endowed the world-famous knight of La Mancha. The present volume represents him in a homely aspect. There is not the least tendency towards that profuse display of the mock-heroic and the semi-sublime, of which he is the greater master. He here only aims at being comical; and although, in our opinion, he does not always succeed, the scenes of Parisian social life, and the sketches of Parisians in the provinces, which he presents to us, are always lively and amusing. But the volume derives interest from its being one of the earliest works of an acknowledged master. We are introduced by him to life in the country, to life in the provinces, to day-schools and boarders, to picture-exhibitions, to races, to sales by auction; we even go with him so far as Baden-Baden; we are once more permitted to wonder at the wonders of the Great Exhibition of 1851, and to cross the Channel in company with the English, who soon after visited Paris,—seeing them during their sojourn, not as they saw themselves, but as another saw them. The illustrations are well printed on good paper, with descriptive letterpress, so that children will be amused, whilst grown-up people will be instructed.

"HOWEVER, hungry as he was by the strength of his slender breakfast, he failed not to give audience that day : and the first that came before him was a stranger, who put this following case to him, the stewards and the rest of the attendants being present. . . ."

The Legend of Croquemitaine, and the Chivalric Times of Charlemagne. Freely translated from the French of L'Epine by T. Hood. Illustrated with 177 designs on wood by Gustave Doré. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin. 4to. 31s. 6d.) The "Legend of Croquemitaine" is, in some respects, a sort of French "Don Quixote;" and, like the story of "Jaufry the Knight,"—which and brought into vivid contrast with the colder and more prosaic creation of later times. They abound in strange events; imaginative, vigorous, gay, and poetic images are presented to us of the life of the period, and we discover in all their varied hues and strange peculiarities, a bright picture of chivalric enterprise. The text of Croquemitaine is not comic, in the English sense of the term, nor has the translator striven to make it so, but simply extravagant and ultra-romantic. Nevertheless, M. Doré seems to have looked at the legend as one long-sustained, gigantic joke. He finds fun in situations and events which are of themselves not ludicrous, but merely repulsive. For instance, in the illustration we have chosen—which must by no means be taken as among the best in the book, but was selected because it suited the space at our command—there is nothing essentially ludicrous in the idea of a traveller in the middle ages being shown into a dilapidated garret for a bed-chamber: but Doré has invested the incident with a considerable amount of real fun. In other scenes—as in the representation of the girl-page, Mitaine, and her lion-protector, Croquemitaine, he is grand; and in others—as the Forest of Fear,—terrible: but, as we have said, whether the subject be grand, sublime, or repulsive, it always contains a touch of burlesque. Seldom has an artist exhibited so much versatility; for in this book we have specimens of all his styles—at one moment gloomy and grotesque, at another irresistibly comic, and in every instance powerful and dramatic. Never surely was majesty so thoroughly deprived of its externals as in Doré's portraits of Charlemagne: for whether on his throne or in the privacy of domestic life, the great king seems always to be the subject of a pictorial jest; and very admirably has the artist caught the quiet was also illustrated by Doré, and ably done into English, in 1856, by Alfred Elwes, from the version of Mary Lafont—recounts the wonderful, and often absurd, adventures of a gay knight-errant. The poetic spirit of the middle ages is in these legends re-animated, humour and saturnine sarcasm which ever and anon peeps slyly though L'Epine's descriptions of the loves and quarrels, tournaments and battles, strange accidents and remarkable adventures, of the heroes and heroines in the Legend of Croquemitaine.

ROSES AND HOLLY.*

THIS is a representative work. Not only has it been published in Edinburgh, but it is illustrated by well-known members of the Royal Scottish Academy, and other eminent Scottish artists. The entire artistic and mechanical work, more or less, has been executed in the northern capital; so that the volume may fairly be regarded as a specimen of Scotch skill and Scotch taste. We can truly say, after careful examination, that in any comparison which may be made between it and works of the same pretensions, issued by the most famous London houses, "Roses and Holly" will not suffer. In appearance, and as regards the value of its contents, it is equally meritorious. In preparing the volume, and the illustrations, consisting of landscapes and figure-subjects, caricatures and ideal sketches, are as varied as is the letter-press. By the kindness of the publisher, we are enabled to lay before our readers one of the wood-cuts, illustrating a scene well known to every reader of Scott's "Antiquary." There is no need to inform him what the artist has intended to represent. Maggie with a "handkerchief close-bound about her head, and a coat which had formerly been that of a man," is expostulating with the Antiquary for his attempt to beat down the price of the bannock-fluke and cock-paddle; and we think Mr. Hay has been very happy in reproducing the idea of the author. the editor has in some measure departed from the beaten track of his predecessors. Instead of the classified selections and special subjects usually chosen for Gift Books, he has here given us a miscellaneous collection of art and literary gems, which he has grouped together in "most admired disorder." We have extracts from the most eminent poets and prose writers in the language. All classes of readers will find something suitable to their taste. The author's selections represent every kind of thought and all kinds of style, tration to Poe's "Annabel Lee," Mr. Doyle's humorous rendering of Thackeray's "Sorrowful Werter," and Mr. M'Whirter's splendid river-scene illustrating a passage from Young, also deserve special notice. The editor fears he will be censured for the ambitious title he has given the book; but we can assure him that there is no cause for alarm. The work is worthy of the title he has bestowed upon it.

THE CHILD'S GARLAND.*

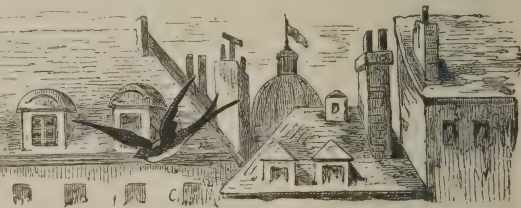

CHRISTMAS Books have of late years come to be so intimately associated with the festivities of the glorious season, that we no longer look with wonder upon the sumptuous volumes which crowd the booksellers' windows to be presently transferred to quiet homes, and pretty drawing-room tables. Too frequently, however, Christmas Books have been usually prepared for educated ladies and gentlemen, their literature being of the highest hot-pressed character, and their art of the most fashionable pre-Raphaelite style. But here we have a Christmas Book intended expressly for the delight of children—a book of easy, simple, natural child-poetry, each page of type being enclosed in a border of flowers, birds, &c. appropriate to the subject of the poem.

In order that our readers may form an opinion of their own as to the literary contents and pictorial embellishment of this charming volume, we present them with one of the ornamental borders, and the poem which it illustrates; merely premising, that the binding and general appearance of the book are appropriate and well designed.

SWALLOWS.

Now the golden summer's here,
Swallows glimmer far and near;
Pleasant sight to see them skim
Over houses tall and grim.
Yet a sweeter sight I know,—
It is where the grasses grow,
And the river glides along
With a soft and happy song—
There to see them, sleek and smart,
Float and wheel, and dive and dart;
Upward, downward, ne'er at rest,
Now upon the water's breast;
Then away o'er hedge and tree
Far, O far as eye can see—
Back again, and round and round,—
In the sky, across the ground,—
Till the day is spent and past,
And they seek their nests at last.

* The Child's Garland of Little Poems. By Matthias Barr. With Illustrative Borders by Giacomelli. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin. 7s. 6d.

The Surprising Adventures of a Clumsy Boy Crusoe. By Chas. H. Ross. (Griffith and Farran.) Mr. Ross, who made his first appearance as a caricaturist about two years ago, appears to have well employed his time, for we find his comic sketches in various Christmas Annuals and other publications. And now he gives us a Robinson Crusoe under a new aspect, that of a clumsy boy who went to sea in a tub, lands on a desolate island, encounters a Man Friday, and meets with a variety of ludicrous adventures, set forth in a couple of dozen funnily-drawn and highly-coloured pictures, which are sure to provoke laughter on the faces of the little people for whom the publication is designed.

Helen in Switzerland; a Tale for Young People. By the Hon. Augusta Bethell. (Griffith and Farran. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.) The notion of an intelligent father taking his little daughter abroad, and describing everything remarkable that they see on their way—for the benefit of little readers who do not go abroad with intelligent fathers—is by no means new; but in this book the idea is worked out in a natural and entertaining manner; and the conversations between father and daughter seem to be such as might really take place. But in addition to the sights to be seen, various small adventures occur to the travellers; and these go to make up an interesting book.

MISS INGELOW'S POEMS.*

Profusely illustrated, this volume is one of the most attractive that has appeared. The typography, the paper and ink, and the binding are all worthy of the illustrations. Indeed, were we disposed to find fault with anything, it would be with some of the illustrations themselves. They are almost without exception clever drawings, and have all been admirably engraved and printed; but we complain that several of them have not suffi-

We suppose, however, by the necessities of English art this must be so. The man who is skilful in representing birds will, of course, select a passage in which he can show his skill in delineating the habits and ways of the feathered tribe; another, whose forte is landscape, will give us picturesque views selected with taste from his portfolio; whilst a third, who is a figure painter, will choose for his text a line in which he can exalt his merits in a ciently close connexion with the text. We occasionally find some difficulty in discovering the allusion, and very frequently we feel that the artist has failed to seize the characteristic passage of the poem he is illustrating, but has directed his skill to the elucidation of some minor point, which might well have been left without pictorial comment.

particular department. The volume before us will exemplify our meaning. Several of the illustrations have no reference to the text, or have a reference so remote that it requires much consideration to detect it. We have the pleasure, however, of presenting to our readers a page-illustration in which this defect does not occur. It is descriptive of a nest which lay—

"Down in the mosses and knot-grass pressed,
Soft and warm, and full to the brim,
Vetches leaned over it, purple and dim,
With buttercup buds to follow."

* Poems, by Jean Ingelow. With ninety-seven Illustrations by G. J. Pinwell, E. J. Poynter, J. W. North, E. Dalziel, J. Wolf, T. Dalziel, A. B. Houghton, and W. Small. Engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Small quarto. pp. 334. 21s. Longmans.

Here it will be confessed that the most of the subject has been made by Mr. Wolf.

Miss Ingelow is a great favourite with our American cousins, and the present edition has been published simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic. Messrs. Roberts Brothers, of Boston, a young, but most respectable firm, were among the first to see the beauties of the poetry in the Songs of Seven; they had previously published the complete works of the fair authoress, and the two editions* now before us, deserve more than a mere passing notice. Both works—the complete edition of Miss Ingelow's poems, and the selection named above—do infinite credit both to printers and publishers, and, we may add, binders too. An American edition of the works of a lady whose fame is an assured thing amongst Americans, was obvious enough—and no pains have been spared to give it fresh life, and a new lease of patronage. Excellent paper, clear type, and the neatest of covers, characterize the present edition. In the selection "Songs of Seven," printed at the Cambridge University press by Messrs. Welch, Bigelow and Co., we have a volume most sumptuously got up, with some admirable illustrations—conspicuous amongst which is that to which are appended the words, "There is the home where my thoughts are sent," &c. which would do credit to Birket Foster; and the engraving illustrating the lines, "I leaned out of window, I smell the white clover," &c. The latter, indeed, is one of the most effective we have ever seen. Altogether, this handsome gift-book deserves special commendation, and we congratulate the publishers on their enterprise, and on the good taste they have displayed in the publication. To the admirers of Miss Ingelow's tender and fanciful muse these two volumes should be treasures.

ROBY'S TRADITIONS OF LANCASHIRE.*

ROBY'S "Traditions of Lancashire" is a North English Classic. Of them, Sir Francis Palgrave, in a letter to their author, in 1829, says,—"The skill you have shown in working up the rude materials, must entitle them to the highest rank in the class of work to which they belong. You have made a valuable addition, not only to English literature, but to English topography. Your collection for these popular traditions form, or ought to form, an important feature in topographical history." These two volumes include all the books, was esteemed a few years since as one of Lancashire's most prominent verse and prose writers. As a child, he was noted for his quickness and thirst for knowledge, and he early acquired a taste for poetry, legend, and music, in which latter art he was no mean performer upon the organ and other instruments. His occupation in Wigan, his native town, when he grew up to manhood, was that of a banker, but he was best known as a writer and lecturer, a traveller and a musician. When, after having published, as is the rule with enthusiastic young writers, a book of poems and a tragedy, he brought out his "Traditions of Lancashire," he at once rose into the higher ranks of authors, and attained a name and fame which must have satisfied his highest ambition. Remarkable for numerous and varied talents, no less than for warmth of friendship, rich imagination, love of humour, and deep earnest piety, it seemed as though his success in life was assured;

but in 1850 his career of usefulness was cut short, when he had attained little more than middle age. He was fifty-seven years old when he was unfortunately drowned in a short sea trip, from Liverpool to Glasgow, in the ill-fated steamer "Orion," leaving a widow and one daughter, who were rescued from the waves, after the vessel struck on some hidden rocks, only to learn that the husband and father was lost.

stories published in the first series in 1829, and the legends contained in the second series, issued in 1831, with the whole of the steel plates and wood-cuts belonging to the four volumes. The text is precisely as it was left by Mr. Roby, without alteration or omission. The steel plates, as drawn by Pickering, and engraved by Finden, look as fresh as ever; as also do the wood engravings,—one of which, illustrative of the legend of the "Eagle and Child," we insert as a fair specimen of the whole.

THE SPIRIT OF PRAISE.*

THE SPIRIT OF PRAISE. (SPECIMEN OF THE ILLUSTRATIONS.)

ONE of the most pleasing of the books that this season has produced is perhaps the "Spirit of Praise," issued by Messrs. Warne & Co. The object of the editor has been, instead of selecting from among the writers of sacred poetry an individual author for publication in an illustrated form, fairly to represent, in one volume, the various authors who, from the twelfth century to the present time, "have built up the beautiful temple of sacred song, that stands forth as the ornament and pride of our English literature." The work is divided into twenty-four sections, under such headings as "Prayer," "Faith," "The Nativity," &c; and under each are arranged the hymns suitable to the division. As may be imagined, few of our best known hymn-writers are omitted. We have thus the favourites of our childhood and those we have since learned to love. The selection has, indeed, been made with such judgment and discrimination that the reader, whatever may be his peculiar bent of mind or religious tendency, will find in these pages something of "godly solace and comfort." If we regard the book in another aspect, we shall still have only praise to give. The illustrations are all appropriate, and in addition to ordinary woodcuts, we have emblematical figures with gold backgrounds and initial letters and ornamental headings in imitation of the old illuminators. These are the special glories of the volume, but on account of the peculiar manner in which they are printed, we are unable to include any specimens within our pages. Those by Mr. J. Burlison are very pleasing and effective, and will, we are sure, do much to popularize the book, as it deserves. Artists, printer, and engravers have done their work well, and must divide the praise between them. We are enabled to lay before the readers of The Bookseller a drawing by Mr. Small, illustrative of one of Watts's well known hymns beginning:—

"How rich are thy provisions, Lord!"
 "Thy table furnished from above;"

which for rich effects is not surpassed by any other in the work.

EASTWARD.*

IT was the good fortune of Dr. Macleod to visit the East without any special object. He neither went for the benefit of his health, which, he tells us, is excellent; nor was he deputed by the church to which he belonged to undertake a missionary tour; nor did he go, like many recent writers, for the purpose of gathering materials for a book; nay, he protested to his excellent publisher and fellow-traveller against preparing a single article for the pages of Good Words. "He went to Palestine, and no one," he says, "will be disposed to ask a reason for his undertaking the journey." Starting from Marseilles, which they reached by way of Paris, where they spent a day, the travellers encountered a hurricane in the Mediterranean, which obliged them to put into Toulon; but they were not permitted to land, and, as soon as the weather moderated, made for Malta. This gave them an opportunity of seeing that curious island of forts by moonlight, and climbing up streets of stone stairs, one of which is shown in the initial letter at the head of this notice. Thence they went their way to Alexandria, and took the tourists' ordinary route to the pyramids; after which they visited Cairo, crossed the desert, and so entered the Holy Land at Jaffa. Here begins the really valuable portion of Dr. Macleod's interesting narrative. He and his companion successively walked or rode to all the memorable sites—the Fountain of Abraham, the Church of St. George, Gibeon, the Pool of Hezekiah, Jerusalem, within and without the walls, the Jordan, Jericho, Bethlehem, Bethel, the Hill of Samaria and the town itself, Mount Tabor, the Plain of Jezreel, Tiberias, Nazareth, Sidon, and Damascus, with many other places of less importance. Full page engravings are given of the scenes and cities here mentioned, with numerous smaller woodcuts inserted in the text, and two panoramic views of Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. The great charm of the book, however, is in the cheerful, kindly spirit in which it is written. Dr. Macleod does not, like Mr. Hepworth Dixon, take every legend upon trust, and go into heroics about it; but he examines what he sees with the eye of an educated traveller, and makes his deductions accordingly. Finding nothing at Bethel, save huge limestone rocks, "stones, confusion, and emptiness," he refrains from authoritatively fixing upon the site of the Sanctuary; so also with the doubtful sites in the Holy City itself, and the distant places rendered interesting to all Christians. "There needs," he says, "no effort to 'get up' feeling in Jerusalem. It has, no doubt, its commonplace, prosaic features; more so indeed than most cities of the Eastern world; but it has its glory, its waking dreams, its power over the imagination and the whole spirit, such as no city on earth ever had, or can have. . . . In this way he pleasantly gossips about the events of his journey, giving us pen and ink sketches, from the life, of such odd figures as the one here inserted,— and always showing himself the cheerful companion, and the learned, philosophic friend. For, whenever occasion arises on which critical acumen and the results of industrious research are necessary to be displayed, he shows himself in his higher character. Had we space at our command, we should be happy to exemplify this better quality by copious extract; but we must be content to say that "Eastward" is a book which, though brought out expensively, in all the glories of fine paper, binding, and illustration, is in many respects one of the most notable that has lately appeared—a book with claims alike upon the mere "general reader" and the scientific inquirer; a book that delights while it instructs, and makes us by turns both cheerful and thoughtful.

THE LEISURE HOUR AND SUNDAY AT HOME.

WE have so often spoken in praise of these admirable publications, that really little remains to be said—except this: that the fifteenth volume of the “Leisure Hour” and the thirteenth volume of “Sunday at Home” fully equal, if they do not surpass, their predecessors in interest and variety. Here we might very appropriately close our printed in colours, while the text is abundantly supplied, with wood-engravings of superior character. As a specimen of these, we may refer to the illustration here inserted, which is appended to a graphic sketch of “London Ragamuffins,” by John Macgregor. Other engravings of a more practical and instructive class, as, for instance, portraits of eminent notice, but that perhaps some of our readers may not have seen what we have already written concerning these periodicals. Briefly, then, we may state that both are issued in penny weekly numbers and sixpenny monthly parts, by the Religious Tract Society, and that both are designed as a counterbalance to the pernicious literature dribbled out in weekly doles from the presses of Fleet-street and the Strand. To say that in respect to their literature they are less attractive than their rivals, is to say less than the truth, for, in fact they contain a vast variety of matter calculated to delight and inform all classes of readers—original tales of high character and great interest, stories of travel and adventure, sketches in natural history, biography, and fable; poems and light readable articles, “varieties,” notes of the times, and amusing scraps. The “Sunday at Home” is, of course, rather more grave in character than its neighbour; but it is by no means heavy reading, even for Sundays. Each monthly part of both works contains a full-page picture, men, views of celebrated places, &c., are numerous scattered throughout both volumes; and we may, in conclusion, repeat our previously-expressed opinion that, notwithstanding the multiplicity of periodicals devoted to the delectation and amusement of youth, no more deserving penny serials than “the Leisure Hour,” and “Sunday at Home,” are issued from the London press.

CHILDREN who get this little volume as a present will obtain a real prize; for it is a book in many respects unique. Published in monthly numbers at a penny each, this periodical has now entered its fifth year, and every month adds to its popularity. The plan of the work is very simple—indeed, the quality of simple excellence seems to be one of birds, beasts, and fishes, and other engravings of an attractive character. One of these we borrow from a tale called "Waiting for the Light." In this story children are shown the value of patience, and the mischief that comes of idle talk. Though eminently religious in its tendency "The Children's Prize," is not entirely grave, or of the main elements of its success. There are short stories, sketches from natural history, poems, and apt extracts in every number, capably embellished with original engravings. A series of twelve full-page cuts, illustrative of the Miracles of Jesus, forms the special feature of this volume, which also contains various life-like pictures ascetic in manner. Children love fun and gaiety; therefore cheerful and pleasant sketches with pen and pencil form the staple of each month's number. The twelve numbers bound together in a bright wrapper, make a volume that no child can fail to treasure.

GRISSET'S GROTESQUES.*

MR. GRISSET is not equal in power of drawing to Doré. Nor does he attempt to rival that great artist in fecundity or in variety of subject. He is sui generis. Although he has only lately come before the public as a book-illustrator, he has already earned well-merited reputation. More than any other living draughtsman, he has the power of giving to the inferior animals the passions and thoughts of humanity. The expression which he is able to put into the face of a bird or a monkey is surprising. He never aims at grandeur, or selects subjects for his pencil which are beyond his power to treat efficiently. He endeavours to be droll, and always succeeds. He is frequently grotesque in the highest degree, and, at the same time, so expressive that, occasionally—as for instance when he places two animals opposite each other—the reader believes himself capable of reporting the conversation that would ensue if they were able to express a family of monkeys, seated on a form before a good fire—a picture of domestic happiness. In the second, we see the same family under other circumstances; and, anxious that the reader may participate in our privilege, we here introduce them in their new situation. Turned out of house and home, “because the little ones gnawed their tails,” the two old monkeys “—— borrowed a horse and hired a cart,

And packed their chattels with wondrous art,
And when the loading was all complete,
On top of the goods each took a seat,
And whipped the old nag up and managed to start.”

It will be admitted that the artist has here exhibited genuine humour. The total disregard of the laws of gravitation, the higgledy-piggledy way in which the goods are packed, and the manner in which each member of the family is occupied, cannot fail to raise a laugh on the most serious countenance. The drawing, too, is as admirable their ideas in speech. So clear is he in representation, that no doubt ever exists as to his intention. Mr. Hood, who has in this volume—the sole aim of which is to cause a laugh—undertaken to translate him into verse, has, therefore, had little difficulty to contend against. The two illustrations out of which Mr. Griset has composed a “Moving Tale,” are as good as any in the series; though many are superior in size and more elaborate in design. In the first, we see as the conception is humorous. It is as good as an etching by Collett. We do not remember to have seen anything so thoroughly grotesque, in the portraiture of animals, since Grandville's illustrations to Æsop's Fables, as these “jokes on wood.”

Legends of Savage Life. By James Greenwood. With Thirty-six Illustrations, drawn on wood by Ernest Grisct. 4to. (Hotten.) Here again is Mr. Grisct under the care of another cicerone. He gives us thirty-six illustrations from original designs. The text and the illustrations keep such close company that if there is anything particularly ludicrous in the former—as indeed there is, for Mr. Greenwood is, in a certain sense, an artist in words—we are at once presented with a cut more ludicrous, which makes the fun palpable to our sight as well as to our understanding. If laughing is one of the functions of humanity, Mr. Grisct here provides us with the means for discharging it. No one can turn over the leaves of “Legends of Savage Life” without shouts of laughter. Mr. Greenwood is to the full as successful on this occasion as any admirer of our artist’s “Grotesques” could fairly desire, or indeed, expect.

Cousin Kate’s Library.*

MESSRS. WARNE have published new and greatly improved editions of the juvenile tales written by the late Miss Catherine D. Bell, under the nom de plume of “Cousin Kate.” The series consists of a dozen small octavo volumes, handsomely bound and nicely illustrated. Having been received at their first issue with great favour by young readers, it is only fair to believe their value and usefulness will be enhanced now that they appear as “Cousin Kate’s Library.” It may be said of her stories generally that their aim is to teach, in the attractive guise of fiction, the holiest and noblest truths, and to show how youthful character may be formed, faults cured, and virtues attained, by the wholesome discipline of moral and religious teaching. The particular scope of each story may be generally guessed from its title; as “Aunt Ailie, or Patience and its Reward;” “The Grahams, or Home Life;” “Horace and Mary, or Unconscious Influence;” “Kenneth and Hugh, or Self-Mastery;” “Hope Campbell, or Know Thyself;” “Rosa’s Wish, and How she attained it;” “Lily Gordon, the Young Housekeeper;” “Margaret Cecil, or I Can because I Ought;” “The Huguenot Family, or Help in Need;” and “Ella and Marian, or Rest and Unrest.” The first-mentioned volume, “Aunt Ailie,” is embellished with a portrait of its fair and gifted Authoress; and from the last, “Ella and Marian,” we give an illustration, that may be taken as a specimen of the manner in which the whole series is pictorially embellished. Altogether, we are equally impressed with the versatility, industry, and uniform purity of style observable in these tales, and can warmly recommend “Cousin Kate’s Library” as a very appropriate gift to young people fond of reading.† We understand that Miss Bell’s stories are exceedingly popular both here and in Scotland; and it is no praise to say that they deserve to be so; for, while they professedly aim at the teaching of religious truths, they are by no means deficient in exciting and unexpected incidents.

† Let us venture to suggest that the publishers, Messrs. Warne, might take a hint from American publishers, who, with a series of books like these, would put them up in a neat pasteboard box with a lid. Many book-buyers would be induced to purchase the whole series when thus brought together.

LITTLE LAYS FOR LITTLE FOLK.*

THIS is another work addressed to children. The editor's aim has been to bring together a collection of poems, lyrical and descriptive, such as children are known really to delight in, and such as parents may with perfect confidence offer them. With a view to render the book more acceptable, every page has been illustrated, and the success with which this has been accomplished, may be seen from Mr. Small's representation of Lucy Aikin's "Beggar Man," which we have here the pleasure of reproducing. We have selected this subject as it appeals more directly to the mind of a child than does a landscape; but we may add, that the book contains many landscapes, engraved by Mr. J. D. Cooper, which would do credit to any work of the season.

How well the artist has caught the spirit of the poet!—

Around the fire, one wintry night,
The farmer's rosy children sat;
The fagot lent its blazing light;
And jokes went round and careless chat.

When, hark! a gentle hand they hear
Low tapping at the bolted door,
And thus, to gain their willing ear,
A feeble voice was heard t' implore:

"Cold blows the blast across the moor;
The sleet drives hissing in the wind;

* * * * *

"Open your hospitable door,
And shield me from the biting blast!

Kind Words for Boys and Girls. The first yearly volume of this magazine, issued by the "Book Society," contains a variety of subjects—continuous tales, sketches in natural history, poems, riddles, &c.—with a descriptive essay on Toys by the editor; all more or less illustrated in an attractive manner. "Kind Words" is issued in weekly numbers at a half-penny each, and seems well adapted for the amusement of the children of the middle and operative classes. Some of the tales, written by lady writers, seem more fitted for girls than boys; but then others go in the opposite direction; and as the magazine is for both sexes, the one specialty balances the other; while all the articles have a decidedly moral and religious tendency, as reading for youth should have.

The Adventures of Philip on his Way through the World. By W. M. Thackeray. Crown 8vo. 6s. (Smith, Elder, and Co.) "Who says the world is all cold? There is the sun and the shadow. And the heaven which ordains poverty and sickness, sends pity, and love, and succour." The story of Philip—the story of the griefs and trials, the weaknesses and triumphs, of a circle into which most English readers have been admitted—is a really charming sermon on this gracious text. "Philip," one of the least esteemed of all the works of Thackeray, is, we think, in many respects, one of the best that ever came from his pen. It contains the results of the accumulated experiences of an observant life, placed before the reader, not obtrusively, with no desire to show how clearly the author had taken stock of the meannesses and sacrifices of men and women with whom he had association; good-naturedly, and more in sorrow than in anger at the conclusions at which he had arrived. Those who have already followed the adventures of the hero on his way through the world, need not be told "who robbed him, who helped him, and who passed him by."

The Paris Sketch Book, with its queer dedication to M. Aretz, Tailor, &c., is in one respect a melancholy book. It is out of date. The scenes it depicts, the haunts it describes, the manners it pours, the characters that come on the scene, are all of the past. Paris of to-day would not recognise the pictures of its former self. The same reflections may be indulged in as we turn over the leaves of the volume, as Thackeray himself made in one of his "Roundabout Papers," on the novels that delighted his youth. And Anna Maria Porter, and the Scottish Chiefs, were, in difference of manners, not so far removed from the manhood of our author, as Paris before the Forties is distant from ourselves. But it is the very fact that a quarter of a century has intervened since the composition of these sketches, that gives them their real value. In these pages we have a picture of Paris as it existed in the days of Louis Philippe, drawn by one of the keenest artists that ever attempted to give a representation of our friends on the other side the channel, and of our countrymen on their travels. The designs on copper and wood, by the author, we would not miss for a good deal.

William Hogarth, Painter, Engraver and Philosopher. By George Augustus Sala. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. Smith, Elder, and Co.—De omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis is Mr. Sala's usual theme. He can tell us something about everything and many things about nothing. He appears to be as well acquainted with Kamtschatka and Timbuctoo as with Maiden Lane; can discourse on conic sections with as much facility as ordinary men hail a cab; is able to describe a picture he has never seen with greater accuracy than its actual owner; and can give us his thoughts in a foreign language, and so that foreigners themselves can understand them. He is a most extraordinary man. And his style is as extraordinary as himself. We need not describe it. The author's peculiarities are well known to all who have once been fascinated by the dexterity with which he occasionally runs a thought to death. He is not exactly Ciceronian as to the construction of his sentences, nor does he resemble Swift as to the vocabulary he employs. Mr. Sala is above imitating another man, and his writings are beyond imitation. Mr. Sala is Mr. Sala, and his style is unique. Those who are admirers of him and it, have, we are happy to say, in this work about Hogarth—"the labour of sixty-seven happy nights; nights when the fruits of long years' study of Hogarth and his time have been put to paper"—the opportunity of acquiring in a substantive form the admirable essays which for nine months delighted them as they periodically appeared in the "Cornhill Magazine." The author, upon the completion of the series, acknowledged consciousness of the commission of errors and inaccuracies in the performance of his task, and expressed hope that opportunity would thereafter be afforded him of correcting his blunders elsewhere. But fortunately for us, all the opportunity does not seem to have arrived. The claim for liberal benefit of clergy has not been withdrawn. We have in this volume what we previously had in the Magazine, the "coincidences" of which the author is fond still startling us on the page; the curious lists of names which abound as illustrations of a past age are not curtailed of their fair proportion; we still see our entertainer playing at loto, and trusting to the chances of the lucky bag; and the numerous anecdotes, such as that he relates of his standing with a friend "staring at the great dome of St. Isaac's Church, at Petersburg," have been all judiciously retained on the plea, very just we admit, that if they have nothing to do with Hogarth, they have something to do with Mr. Sala. But the work, notwithstanding its characteristic merits, is one capable of giving instruction as well as amusement. It is by far the best account we possess of our greatest painter. Mr. Sala, notwithstanding all his bad usage, seems thoroughly to have understood the nature of the man whose life and times he was writing; and his estimate of the character of our old painter is the estimate that will undoubtedly be accepted by posterity. Intrinsically and extrinsically, the volume is highly meritorious, and at this season of the year we can recommend no more agreeable reading than Mr. Sala's "William Hogarth, Painter, Engraver and Philosopher."

The Theory of Colouring; being an Analysis of the Principles of Contrast and Harmony in the Arrangement of Colours, with their application to the study of Nature; and Hints on the Composition of Pictures, &c. By J. Bacon. 8vo. (Rowney.) The character of this book being so well described in its title, we need only add that the author's theory is illustrated by various coloured diagrams. Judging from an unprofessional and non-artistic point of view, we should imagine that Mr. Bacon's treatise would prove of great assistance to amateur artists.

WAYSIDE POESIES.*

THE engravings of which this beautiful volume is composed are of various styles and of various degrees of excellence. Some are, indeed, noble specimens at once of wood-engraving and the draughtsman's skill, and there is no sketch in which may not be detected some merit. It is generally, however, artistic merit that we observe in the pictures: there is little trace of thought to be discovered in any of them. Taken per se, however, there is scarcely a fault to be found with any of the sketches—except, indeed, that entitled “The Substance and the

—but in themselves are deserving of little praise. None of them are much above mediocrity, and some of them are decidedly below it. The editor himself, in his short Preface, seems to differ not much from us in this estimate of their merits. He informs us that when he first undertook to select poems to illustrate the woodcuts he had no idea that good verses were so scarce. It would not, of course, be fair for him to depreciate what he has himself selected for presentation to the public; but we fancy the opinion he has formed of them is not a very Shadow,” from the pencil of Mr. Pinwell, we fear, is liable to misconstruction. The little sketch we have the pleasure to introduce is one of those admirable “bits,” by Mr. W. J. North, with which most Englishmen are acquainted, and which, once seen, remain in the memory for ever. Of the poems which accompany the cuts we can say little. Not only are they in great degree liable to the censure usually applicable to woodcut illustrations—that is, they have not sufficient reference to the thing illustrated high one. As we have intimated, however, it is not for the verses the book is to be valued. It contains—as our specimen shows—some of the finest examples of the draughtsman's and wood-engraver's art, and forms one of the most desirable volumes for presentation that we have seen.

* Wayside Poesies: Original Poems of the Country Life. Edited by Robert Buchanan. With original Illustrations by G. J. Pinwell, J. W. North, and F. Walker, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. 4to. cloth, 21s. (Routledge and Sons.)

Heber's Hymns. (Low & Co.) 7s. 6d. To the popular mind Bishop Heber is always associated with his beautiful hymn, “From Greenland's icy mountains,” prepared for a meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; just as Gray is best known by his celebrated “Elegy in a Country Churchyard,” and “Single speech Hamilton” is remembered for his, one parliamentary utterance. But Bishop Heber wrote other hymns which are quite as worthy remembrance, and equally well written, as the universal favourite. In a collection formed by him from ancient and modern writers, most, if not all, of these were inserted. But this collection has long since ceased to attract attention. Heber's own hymns, however, have outlived the publication in which they were incorporated; and, as they have not hitherto been separately issued, the present publishers, with the sanction of the surviving representative of the author, have here brought together all the bishop's contributions, in the hope that they “will be acceptable to all admirers of devotional poetry, and do honour to a memory ever to be revered.” The collection consists of no fewer than fifty-seven hymns; and “as the plan upon which they were composed bears immediate reference to the Lessons of the Day, so has this leading idea been followed in the plan of illustration.” Every page is illustrated; either by an incident from Scripture, or by an emblem appropriate to the subject of the text, from drawings by H. C. Selous, W. Small, and T. D. Scott; and the book, upon the whole, is one that deserves a place upon the drawing-room table.

A Concise Glossary of Terms used in Grecian, Roman, Italian and Gothic Architecture. Fcap. 8vo. with nearly 500 Illustrations. (James Parker and Co.) 7s. 6d.

MR. J. H. PARKER has done more than any other man to popularize in this country the study of Gothic architecture. He has published the most important books on the subject that have been issued from the press, and has himself written several volumes which have become standard works. His acquaintance with the styles of architecture that prevailed in England and in France, from A.D. 1066 down to the time of the Reformation, is second to none; except, perhaps, as he himself acknowledges, it is to Professor Willis;—and his inferiority to that distinguished man is to be remarked only with respect to the principles and processes of construction. It is to Mr. Parker, and to Mr. Parker's books, that architects, churchwardens, and country parsons, resort for information when alteration, restoration, or reconstruction of a church is determined on. It is from his Manuals that learned ladies, and more learned gentlemen, who talk knowingly of the styles, and tell us when the Norman arch was superseded by the early English, and the elegant Perpendicular was supplanted by the hybrid Jacobean, derive the whole of their information; architects consult him, and are not ashamed to follow the advice of an amateur. He has, perhaps, had something more to do with the increase of Ritualism than he would care to confess; nor has he confined himself to the writing and publishing of books by himself and others. He has for years been a most indefatigable worker; and has practical acquaintance with the art which he has made his vocation as well as pastime. He can, moreover, demonstrate and lecture as well as write. It is true he is occasionally found tripping, and has sometimes come to a conclusion from which he has afterwards seen reason to depart. But on the whole, especially on the subject of the domestic architecture of the middle ages, Mr. Parker has few equals. Of the Glossary, now before us, we need say no word of praise. Its popularity has proved the author was right in supposing that such a Manual was needed by the public. Many professional works have been attempted by others, but this is the only one that has proved thoroughly successful. Mr. Parker has also recently published an interesting pamphlet in which he gives us an interesting account of the Mosaic Pictures of Rome and Ravenna, from notes made by him in 1859, and corrected last year. The origin of the Mosaic art, one of the earliest known, belongs to the infancy of civilization. The Chinese possess it; it was found among the primitive inhabitants of America; and it is to be seen among the earliest remains of nearly all nations. Of this curious art, innumerable examples are to be found in Rome and Ravenna. Mr. Parker, finding no concise outline on the subject of Mosaics, has in these pages endeavoured to supply the want.

Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome. Moore's Irish Melodies. (Longmans.) Each 10s. 6d. The remarkable circumstance attending the production of these works in duodecimo is that they are illustrated with the original drawings by Daniel Maclise and George Scharf the younger. How, perhaps the reader may inquire, can that be, seeing that both books were first produced in quarto, with engravings far too large to be now printed upon so small a page as duodecimo? The secret of the matter is this: the pages of the quarto editions, with all their type, and illustrations have been reduced in size by what is known in the printing trade as the India-rubber process. By this means every peculiarity of the larger page is transferred to the smaller one and the illustrations in both editions are, in all respects except size, identical. The modus operandi we understand to be this: impressions from the printed pages of the original quarto work are taken on a sheet of India-rubber, intensely and equally stretched in all directions. After the transfer of the impressions to the India-rubber, the material is then gradually and evenly shrunk or reduced; the impressions, so reduced, being then transferred to lithographic stones, and printed from in the ordinary manner. And very surprising are the effects resulting. In the case of the books before us, a degree of microscopic fineness, which never could have been produced by the general methods of engraving on wood and steel, is observable in all the illustrations; and except for the slight wooliness and want of colour inherent to lithographic impressions of type transferred from printed sheets, the text of each book may be said to be very satisfactory. This objection is less observable in the "Macaulay" than in the "Moore;" consequent, we presume, on the greater affinity between the sharp type impressions and the India-rubber, than between the latter and the impressions from engraved steel-plates. However this may be, it is certain that the adoption of this process will enable many, for whom the original works were too large or too expensive, to possess small and beautiful editions of the "Lays," and the "Melodies."

A Practical Manual of Heraldry and Heraldic Illumination; with a Glossary of the principal Terms used in Heraldry. By F. J. Baignet and C. J. Russell. 8vo. (Rowney.) In this manual an amateur is instructed in all the various details of the fields, charges, metals, colours, tinctures, furs, and other points of blazonry necessary to an acquaintance with the science of Heraldry. A large number of armorial bearings belonging to various families, properly coloured and described by means of chromo-lithography are given. In addition to the interesting Heraldic introduction, there are practical instructions in the art of Illumination, and a full glossary of terms; so that any one may make himself sufficiently learned in Heraldry to distinguish the character of particular coats of arms by mere verbal description.

ÆSOP'S FABLES.*

THE Fables of Æsop are so well known and thoroughly esteemed, that comment on them would be superfluous. All of them, it is true, are not equally good. Some are inferior to the others in unity of design and close connexion between the moral and the narrative. This inferiority, however, is easily accounted for when we remember that many of them were not the immediate work of Æsop, some having been written by authors anterior to him, and some, centuries afterwards, by the monks in the middle ages. This particular edition, by the Rev. George Fyler Townsend, claims to be a new and literal translation from the Greek. A Fable differs, in a measure, from both a Tale and a Parable in one important particular,—“the representation of human motive, and the improvement of human conduct,” is the aim of all; but the first conceals its design, so that advice is given whilst the adviser remains concealed. The work is illustrated with one hundred and fourteen engravings. They are well drawn and well cut. As a specimen we give, “The Herdsman and the Lost Bull.” “A herdsman tending kine in a forest, lost a Bull-calf from the fold. After a long and fruitless search, he made a vow that, if he could only discover the thief who had stolen the calf, he would offer a lamb in sacrifice to Hermes, Pan, and the guardian Deities of the forest. Not long afterwards, as he ascended a small hillock, he saw at its foot a Lion feeding on the Calf. Terrified at the sight, he lifted his eyes and his hands to heaven, and said; ‘Just now I vowed to offer a lamb to the Guardian Deities of the forest, if I could only find out who had robbed me; but now that I have discovered the thief, I would willingly add a full-grown Bull to the Calf I have lost, if I may only secure my own escape from him in safety.’”

The Parable of the Prodigal Son. With Notes by James Hamilton, D.D.; and Illustrations by H. C. Selous. 8vo. (Nisbet.) In a dozen most graphic and exquisite drawings,—which are admirably engraved in the good old style, by J. Pearson,—Mr. Selous has illustrated the Parable of the Prodigal Son, perhaps the most natural and touching story in the New Testament. In as many chapters, Dr. Hamilton has retold the beautiful narrative, adding to it such details as his extensive reading and knowledge of what is required by readers, suggested; the whole making one of the prettiest of the books which the present season has produced.

Great Fun Stories. By T. Hood and T. Archer. 4to. (Low and Co.) The forty-eight highly-coloured pictures, and the eight very sober and unexciting stories by which they are accompanied, are intended to delight young ladies and gentlemen of from two years old to five. The exalted aim of the authors will be accomplished; for at that tender and interesting period of life, young ladies and gentlemen are not supposed to possess any very correct notions of perspective, or any particularly severe theories about drawing—in both which absurd requisites of art these Great Fun pictures are most appropriately and ridiculously deficient.

TWO CENTURIES OF SONG; or, Melodies, Madrigals, Sonnets, and other Occasional Verses of the English Poets of the last Two Hundred Years. With Critical and Biographical Notes by Walter Thornbury. Small 4to. (Sampson Low and Co.) 21s. The first intention of the editor was to have made the volume "a sort of Wardian glass-case, wherein the butterflies of Parnassus might have freely disported themselves." We must plead ignorance in this matter; we are not quite sure whether we know what a Wardian glass-case is. Luckily, however, there soon appears to be no occasion for alarm. There were to be no butterflies—no Wardian glass-cases. The editor was only speaking metaphorically; it was a mere conceit on his part—meant not to disturb us, but simply to announce an alteration of plan.

Instead, then, of making a case of butterflies, the editor has here sought to select and present to the reader the best poems of that class known as Vers de Société—poems which he defines to be "written for refined circles of educated people, and composed for friends on special, often on personal, occasions." Without quarrelling with him for his definition of Vers de Société (which certainly cannot rightly be described as "Occasional Poems," nor do they include all verses written for refined circles of educated people), we must congratulate him and the purchasers of this beautiful book upon the enlargement of the original scheme. The volume contains the most exquisite minor poems of the best English Poets from the time of George Wither down to Algernon Swinburne. These are placed in historical order and chronologically arranged, so that, with the critical and biographical notes supplied by Mr. Thornbury, the reader is, in a great degree, enabled to trace the origin, development, and decay of certain well-known styles and fashions in verse. The selection has been made with much judgment and taste. We miss scarcely any favourite, which, from the nature of the plan, we should expect to see inserted; and the list contains the name of every poet of note who lived during the last two hundred years. In favour of the artistic merits of the book too much cannot be said. The illustrations, of which there are nineteen, are from the pencils of some of our best book-illustrators, whilst the ornamental title-page, designed by Henry Shaw, F.S.A., has been admirably engraved by Utting. The cover of the volume, with gilt clasp, and embellished in the style of the Renaissance, is exceedingly beautiful; and the book, whether we regard its contents or its outward appearance, forms one of the most acceptable literary presents we could name.

THE OBERLAND AND ITS GLACIERS, Explored and Illustrated with Ice Axe and Camera, by H. B. George, M.A., Editor of the Alpine Journal. 4to. (Bennett.) 42s. There was no occasion for the editor to offer excuses, as he has done in his Preface, for the publication of this work. It is without exception—whether we regard it from a scientific point of view, or as merely giving a description of a perilous and interesting tour amidst Alpine scenery,—one of the most instructive and entertaining books that have ever appeared on its subject. It seems that at the end of August 1865, a party congregated at Grindelwald; the centre around which all revolved being a photographic camera, to the imperative requirements of which it was understood that all other considerations must yield. The object in view was to travel round the Oberland, commencing from Lauterbrunnen and Grindelwald, and thence working to the head of the Valais, to make way along its northern slopes, returning into Berne by the Gemmi. No route would be more interesting. The glaciers of the Oberland are very varied in their character. Not only does the Oberland contain every type and size of glacier; but every phenomenon which has been observed, whether in the actual formation of ice-streams, or in their effects and operations, is to be seen in perfection. Persuaded of this, the party determined to seek out, as far as possible on certain selected glaciers, such a series of pictures as would give a tolerably clear and connected view of the origin and course of glaciers in general, and of the remarkable objects to be observed upon them. They seem to have been eminently successful in their attempt, and this book, containing thirty-seven photographic illustrations and a map of the Bernese Oberland, is the result. Mr. Ernest Edwards' photographs are of uniform excellence, and serve to give those who have not visited the Alps a correct idea of its scenery phenomena.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JEANNE D'ARC, called "The Maid." By Harriett Parr. 2 vols. 16s. (Smith, Elder, & Co.) All the known authentic documents concerning Jeanne D'Arc have been collected and published by the "Society of the History of France;" and it is from these original sources that Miss Parr has drawn her materials for this "Life of the Maid of Orleans." She has, she tells us, also been indebted occasionally to other sources for historical narrative necessary to give the story coherence. We cannot better inform the reader what he has to expect from the view taken in this work, than by quoting Miss Parr's words:—"Some familiar tales," says she, "will be missed in these volumes, and some traits will be found in the character of the Maid which a sentimental tenderness has commonly slurred over, regarding them, perhaps, as blemishes; for my endeavour has been to represent her true to nature and to evidence, sure that the truth of a nature so loyal, religious, and pure is more touching with its rudenesses and its shadows upon it, than with any glosses overlaying them, or any evasions striving to deny them." Although we do not agree with Miss Parr's estimate of the Maid's character or of her work, we are glad to have the opportunity of recommending a revision of the story, which in many particulars differs most essentially from that usually considered correct.

The Boy and the Constellations. By Julia Goddard. (Warne & Co.) Fcap. 8vo. "Fredolin was a little German boy to whom the Moon whispered beautiful stories as he lay sleeping in his little bed. Her voice sounded very low, because she was far away, but still he heard every word distinctly; and if she had spoken louder, it might have awakened him, or people in the house might have listened, which would not have done at all, as the Moon often told Secrets to Fredolin." In this way Miss Goddard begins her stories of the old Greek Mythology, and, tells, in simple language, the poetic histories of Ariadne, Hercules and Cerberus, Lyra, Cepheus, Cassiopeia, Perseus and Andromeda, Pegasus, Hyades, Virgo and the Pleiades; with many a pretty episode between. Possibly this method—one that has been so happily followed out by Mr. Charles Kingsley here, and by Mr. Bullfinch in America,—is greatly to be preferred as a means of teaching children the Pagan Mythology to that of Lempriere or the older works, which with the beauties of the fables gave also the obscurity of the poets. A very elegant Christmas Book for Children is the result. It is enriched by various excellent page engravings, from drawings by A. W. Cooper; one of which we give, illustrating the story of Hyas, the son of Atlas and Æthra, whose fondness for field sports led him so often into danger, that at last he was killed by a wild boar; and his sisters, constantly lamenting his fate, were changed by Jupiter into stars, which look down, from among countless bright companions, upon the children of earth for ever.

Snow-Bound; A Winter Idyl. By John Greenleaf Whittier. The Golden Ripple; or the Leaflets of Life, an Allegorical Poem. By Robert St. John Corbet. These poems are uniform in size, appearance, and price. Both are published by Mr. A. Bennett, and illustrated by photography; and both are printed at the "Gresham Steam Press." Of the poems, as poems, we have a high opinion; for they are graceful in sentiment, and correct in style. Especially beautiful are some of Mr. Whittier's descriptions of the snow-covered landscape, the dreary moor, and the raging northern storm. The "Ocean Home," by Mr. Corbet, is also a pretty conceit; and the photographs in the two volumes are well selected and appropriate. But there our praise must stop; for the printing, though executed in mauve-coloured ink, is not worthy the verses or the pictures.

Hymns of Faith and Hope. By Horatius Bonar, D.D. (Nisbet.) This new edition of Dr. Bonar's hymns appears in such attractive guise—gold and crimson, fine paper, with each page enclosed in a border of arabesque—as cannot fail to recommend it to the attention of numerous purchasers; for however we may prize a book for its literary merits, there is something uncommonly pleasant in handling a well-bound volume. We are all fond of seeing our favourites well-dressed.

The Fruit Manual. By Robert Hogg, LL.D. Third Edition. (Office of the "Cottage Gardener.") This volume contains the descriptions, synonyms, and classification of all the principal fruits grown in and imported to this country; with such hints and practical advice as cannot but prove highly useful to professional or amateur pomologists.

BOOKS ILLUSTRATED BY GRAPHOTYPE.

It has been a frequent complaint of draughtsmen on wood that their peculiar effects were destroyed in the process of engraving. Now, however, a plan has been discovered—accidentally, as is not uncommon in art-processes—by which the draughtsman may make his drawing on a surface of prepared chalk; which drawing is stereotyped or electrotyped, and the metal plate so produced printed from in the ordinary way. The process is termed Graphotype; and, as it dispenses altogether with the engraver's art, the actual drawing, line for line and dot for dot, is transferred, in relief to the stereo-plate. A company has been formed to carry out the invention, other well-known book-illustrators; each page being enclosed in an ornamental border designed by Mr. Fitzcook, the managing director of the Graphotype Company, and the book itself got up after the best fashion of presentation volumes.

The other book is entitled, Twigs for Nests; or, Notes for Nursery Nurture, by the author of the "Expositions of the Cartoons of Raphael." Of the literature of this volume, we can speak in terms of praise; for the author, with the experience derived from an acquaintance with two generations of children, discourses pleasantly and practically on the best methods of teaching, amusing, and training infants.

The illustrations are by J. M. Zwecker, D. C. Hitchcock, H. K. Browne, and others; and that our readers may judge for themselves of the sort of pictures produced by the new art, we borrow a graphotype by Phiz, illustrative of "Nursery Nonsense." Of the art itself, it would, in this early stage, be hardly fair to speak in positive terms. The scratchy, liney, raw, and crude effects observable in many of these drawings, we must ascribe to the artist's very partial acquaintance with the tools and materials employed. Certainly, nothing like the softness and half-tones of the best engravings by Linton, or discovery,—which is American—and two books, wholly illustrated by this new process, have been published by Messrs. Nisbet. The first and most important of these volumes is Dr. Watts's Divine and Moral Songs for Children, with drawings by Holman Hunt, J. D. Watson, G. Du Maurier, Hablot K. Browne (Phiz), Marcus Stone, H. Anelay, Florence Claxton, Miss M. E. Edwards, and Branston, and Harvey are seen in these illustrations: but then something is to be ascribed to the plan, so popular with our pre-Raphaelite draughtsmen, of drawing on the wood with a pen, instead of a pencil, by which perspective is sacrificed to broad black and white effects, and the sketch that used to take an artist two or three days to produce, is now knocked off in as many hours.

The Adventures of a Griffin on a Voyage of Discovery. Written by Himself. Small 8vo. 7s. 6d. (Bell and Daldy.) Griffin is a lad who has a taste for drawing, and determines to be an artist. Emboldened by the laudatory encouragement of friends in praise of early efforts, he speedily begins to regard the work of his drawing-master with contempt, and dreams of astonishing the cognoscenti with his pictures at the next Academy Exhibition. He goes to work bravely, and makes several sketching tours, and is really getting on, when news reaches him that the Government has determined to fit out an expedition of discovery round the world, but more especially to carry on the survey of Torres Straits and the Great Barrier Reef, on the coast of Australia; and that he may join the expedition as draughtsman. He accepts the offer, and joins the ship. Then he tells how he leaves England, crosses the Line, touches at the Cape, lands in Australia, and really sees life in the Antipodes. The narrative is, we presume, an authentic account of a real series of adventures; for it is written in a most easy and pleasant manner, and is illustrated with some thirty engravings, from sketches drawn by himself, of various incidents which befel him. The "Adventures of a Griffin" make an exceedingly interesting book, which will be read by hundreds of boys to whom the imitations of the "Robinson Crusoe" style of narrative are getting almost too familiar.

HALF-HOURS WITH THE BEST AUTHORS.*

It is almost impossible to over-estimate the importance of this compendium of English literature, which contains more than three hundred extracts from the writings of our standard poets, essayists, historians, divines, travellers, and philosophers—something, indeed, for readers of all tastes. For the givers of Penny Readings no work could be more appropriate and welcome; as not only are the extracts of suitable length for occasional readings, but prefixed to each quotation are various apt remarks and explanatory details concerning its writer, its subject, or the circumstances surrounding its production. This new edition has been revised and remodelled, and many selections have been made from the works of authors who, since the first issue of the work, have proved themselves worthy to take rank with the "best." Despite the care, however, bestowed by editor and printer upon the text, some few small inaccuracies have crept into this edition. One of these occurs in Hood's "Dream of Eugene Aram," which destroys the harmony of the poet's triple-rhymed verse: in the last line of the first stanza, which describes the "four-and-twenty happy boys," who "came bounding out of school," the word "stream" is printed for "pool"—

"There were some that ran, and some that leapt, Like troutlets in a pool."

In the fourth volume are inserted several of Præd's celebrated enigmas, which are incomplete without their solutions; and the well-known enigma on the letter H is attributed to Lord Byron, though it is now generally believed to have been written by Catherine Fanshawe. These are, however,

Wealth and Welfare. By Jeremiah Gotthelf. (2 vols. 21s. Strahan.) This tale has a decidedly religious tendency. There is much preaching—"bear and forbear" seeming to be the text from which the author discourses. The scene is laid at Liebiwyl, a secluded valley in the canton of Berne, principally in the house of a well-to-do farmer named Christian. The farmer has two sons and a daughter, whom he is anxious to settle in life; and it is on the love affairs of these young people, especially on those of the younger son, Andrew, to whom the farm falls, that the plot turns. This son has great difficulty with his intended father-in-law, a neighbouring farmer, cunning and sordid, not disinclined to unfair dealing,—the evil genius of the piece. The latter wishes from pecuniary motives to marry his daughter to an

but very slight blemishes in a work of such general excellence as the "Half-hours with the Best Authors." To each volume are prefixed medallion portraits of the most celebrated of the authors from whose works the editor has made quotation; and the late William Harvey, one of the most versatile of draughtsmen, has given to the work the charm of pictorial illustration, in some half hundred well-designed woodcuts. One of these, illustrating a passage from Addison's "Spectator," No. 269, we are enabled to present to our readers. In like manner, the artist gives us his notion of a literary dinner, at the house of Smollett, a century ago; an episode of the Great Plague of London, in elucidation of an extract from "Pepys' Diary;" an imaginary scene from the massacre of St. Bartholomew, as described in a translation from the quaint old French of Madame de Mornay; and various other sketches, which will be alike valued as specimens of Harvey's powers, and as apt illustrations of the text.

old widower who has already had three wives, and who has almost fallen into his dotage. The reader can now imagine, as easily as we can describe, what follows. After many obstacles have been surmounted, the young couple are brought together in the last chapter, which we think the best in the book. The chapter is entitled "Death the Reconciler," and brings us to the death-bed of Andrew's mother, the good and affectionate Annie, and here we are to suppose that everything will end as it should. This work is evidently written by one who is thoroughly acquainted with the kind of retired life represented in "Wealth and Welfare," and his descriptive passages are sometimes admirable for their force and beauty. It is a novel we can recommend to the reader when he next sends to Mudie's for a batch of books.

Views and Opinions. By Matthew Browne. (Strahan.) 6s. "This is distinctly a 'viewy' book. It does indeed contain decisive lines, and perhaps over-many angles, of opinion; but the form in which the matter is cast is lyrical and meditative, and it is addressed to moods and ways of looking at things—in a word, it is 'viewy.'" In these lines, Mr. Matthew Browne has well described his volume of Essays. For a long time we have not been so fortunate as to light upon so valuable a contribution to our stock of essays. The tone of the writer is throughout most charming, and the expression is worthy of the thought. There is nothing bold in the speculations of the writer; we are never shocked by paradox, or carried away by unusual or disputed views of life; all is uniformly smooth. Moderate and measured in language, the essayist avoids, on the one hand, the pitfalls into which "smart" writers invariably drop, and, on the other, he takes care not to make himself chargeable with being a writer of "slipshod," even when he is familiar. The fastidiousness of a fine nature preserves him from such faults as these. Indeed, were we to describe the work in the fewest possible words, we should say its characteristic is a kind of valetudinarianism by no means disagreeable. It is not very easy to give a specimen of the author's quality, within the limits here assigned us; but we quote the following passage, which has the advantage of furnishing a key to much of Mr. Brown's speculations on men and things, and will give the reader a not unfavourable specimen of his style. "It is nothing beautiful that I apprehend for civilization, except as all outbreaks of life not base are beautiful. I apprehend rather that what I have called the bacchantic tendency—which neither Religion, nor Science, nor Polity, scarcely Art, now touches with but a little finger, and which now simply spots our borders with vice—should some day take on unity and volume, and wake us from our dreams of order and security with a splendid rebellion for which our economy of crowds has had no thought, for which civilization leaves no space, but in which God will speak out of his whirlwind again, in tones which will not be understood till they are passed into retreating thunder on the skirts of the skies, and men listen for the echo rather than for the voice." While agreeing with the writer as to the tendency of our civilization, we must express our complete dissent from him as to the value and effect of the revolution into which we are said to be hastening. Mr. Matthew Browne gives no sign in these Essays of being able to appreciate that.

Learning better than House or Land. 18mo. (Darton and Co.) Dr. Carey's little story, which was very popular sixty years ago, has been revised, and to some extent modernized, by the Rev. Charles Webster; and now appears in a new and attractive dress. Possibly, the grandchildren of those who first read it, will take as much interest as they did in the adventures of the idle and industrious apprentices.

The Beggar's Benison; or, A Hero without a Name, but with an Aim. A Clydesdale Story. Illustrated by upwards of 300 amateur Pen-and-ink Sketches. In two vols. 8vo. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.) From a cursory glance at this book, which is neither a novel, a history, nor a biography, while partaking somewhat of the character of each, we should be inclined to pronounce it worthless,—its literature crude and more than amateurish, without plot, plan, or apparent object; its illustrations inartistic, and tasteless in design, and exceedingly rough and juvenile in execution; its printing, even for a provincial house, poor and inelegant; and its general appearance uninviting. But if we summon up courage to read beyond a paragraph here and there, and go right through the narrative from beginning to end, our first judgment will be reversed, and we shall discover that, after all, there is something in the book. Though evidently the work of an unpractised writer, and in spite of the three hundred and more odd little woodcuts let into the type, after the manner of the old-fashioned "Pilgrim's Progress," that was the delight of our youth; notwithstanding the general repulsiveness—we cannot use a milder term—of the story, we find the "Beggar's Benison" to be in many respects a remarkable production. Briefly stated, it is the history of a little human waif born in a Glasgow garret, amidst the most sordid surroundings,—a drunken mother, a ruffian step-father, who, with his companion burglar, is most deservedly hanged in the early part of the narrative; a wretched, poverty-stricken sister, yet too young to know the difference between vice and virtue; and, generally, an atmosphere of wretchedness, misery, and crime. From such a beginning, the hero, after many adventures, many temptations, and many backward falls, raises himself into respectability and position; and the reader who has the courage to wade through the tale, finds his reward in the end, and respects its author. Though abounding with inconsistencies and gaucheries,—each of the fifty-one chapters, for instance, commencing with verses by the "Goosedubbs Poet," and which are very rightly called "introductory doggerels"—the story contains numerous clever bits of satire, and not a few facts and figures concerning the condition of the working classes of Glasgow. As we get familiar with the little woodcuts, which occur in almost every other page of the two volumes, we begin to think that they are not deficient in character; and, as we read chapter after chapter, we discover ourselves taking real interest in the career of the hero, and feel glad to find at last all that was wrong coming right, and all that was repulsive, pleasant to peruse and muse over. We must, however, remark that the author has no special theory to advance; no favourite "isms" to advocate; no teetotalism, chartism, or universal panacea for want and wretchedness, to obtrude; but that his story is, as nearly as may be, the story which many a City Arab might tell if he had the power.

The Imperial Bible-Dictionary, Historical, Biographical, Geographical, and Doctrinal; including the Natural History, Antiquities, Manners, Customs, and Religious Rites and Ceremonies mentioned in the Scriptures, and an Account of the several Books of the Old and New Testaments. Edited by the Rev. Patrick Fairbairn, D.D. Illustrated by numerous Engravings. 2 vols. Imperial 8vo. £3 12s. (Blackie & Son.) From the labours of Calmet down to the recent publications of Kitto and Dr. W. Smith, we have had a good many Biblical Dictionaries and books of reference, of more or less merit; and in these portly, well-printed volumes, we have before us the most recent, and, as we have every reason to suppose, the most exhaustive work of its nature.

The name, character, and reputation of the learned Editor and his no less learned coadjutors afford an assurance that a vast amount of Scriptural learning must have been brought to bear upon the manifold subjects passed under consideration in these volumes; while matters of acknowledged perplexity and doubt, which have already engaged the attention of preceding writers, will have here again been subjected to that sifting process, by the agency of which, in addition to the results of recent Eastern travel and research, the truth, or a close approximation to it, may be gained.

"In the treatment of the different topics," we learn from the preliminary notice, "full advantage is taken of the materials which modern criticism and research have accumulated. Within a comparatively recent period much has been done by Biblical scholars to establish the authentic text of Scripture, to explicate its meaning, and illustrate the events and customs of which it speaks; and the increased light and certainty thus obtained are here made accessible, in a convenient form, to those who, though not without scientific or religious culture, have neither the time nor the opportunity requisite for minute or lengthened investigations. The difficulties and objections which modern Rationalism has raised concerning many parts of Scripture, are also noticed in their proper places, and are met with solutions which, it is hoped, may satisfy reasonable minds."

In reference to the illustrations—the engravings in steel in the first volume are twelve in number, those in wood no fewer than 381,—special attention, we are assured, and we have no doubt, has been devoted to them; and they will be found to include representations of plants and animals, notable scenes and places, manners of social life, and the manifold productions of human skill and handicraft; also maps and plans serving to elucidate the topography of special localities. In addition, there are interspersed throughout the text, a series of views of places that figure prominently in the Bible narrative, engraved on steel in the most finished style.

We have the opportunity of placing two of the wood-engravings before our readers. From the second they will learn how antiquities are illustrated in this highly meritorious book; the first gives a modern view, in apt illustration of the usages of ancient times. As to the nature of its contents, our limits preclude the possibility of the slightest analysis of them. The price for so extensive a work is by no means extravagant; and those who desire to know more about its merits will do well to ascertain them for themselves.

SIEGE OF A CITY.—(SPECIMEN OF THE ILLUSTRATIONS.)

Les Contemporains de Molière. Recueil de Comédies rares ou peu connues, joués de 1650 à 1680. Avec l'Histoire de chaque Théâtre, des Notes et Notices biographiques, bibliographiques et critiques. Par Victor Fournel. Tomes I, II. (Paris : Didot Frères, Fils, et Cie.) 8vo. pp. 594, 672. At the time when the English stage was reduced to utter prostration under the proscription of Puritan rule, or was slowly struggling into re-existence on a larger scale than heretofore by the agency of the "King's" and the "Duke's" Companies, under the guidance of Killigrew and Davenant, the stage of France was already at its zenith, under the munificent auspices of Louis the Fourteenth, his nobles and his Court—its chief trysting-places, of more or less grandeur, being the Théâtre de l'Hôtel de Bourgogne, Le Marais, the Palais Royal, the Théâtre de la Rue Mazarine, the Théâtre de Mademoiselle, the Théâtre de la Cour, with many others, metropolitan and provincial, of inferior note.

The great contributor of comic power to the stage at this period, in the double capacity of writer and actor, was Jean Baptiste Poquelin, more generally known by his theatrical cognomen of "Molière." But while Molière was then laboriously and successfully catering for the amusement of the magnificent Louis and his metropolitan lieges, several minor planets revolving around him shone forth with their more feeble rays. The very names of most of these writers are unknown, probably, to most English readers, and are remembered solely by the more learned among their countrymen, through a few surviving copies of the works which gained for them a momentary celebrity a couple of centuries ago. In the present publication—to be extended to four or five volumes in the whole—M. Fournel is making a laudable attempt to revive their memory, and to inspire his countrymen with some interest in their literary relics, by placing them before the public in a most inviting form. Each of the theatrical establishments above named seems to have had its own staff of comic writers. The Théâtre de l'Hôtel de Bourgogne was the best arranged and the most important of them all, and accordingly occupies the first place in this work; the whole of the first volume, and part of the second, being occupied by it. Among its writers we find the names of Quinault (probably now the best remembered), Boissier, Boursault, Montfleury, Poison, and Brecourt. The comedies of each writer are prefaced with a biographical sketch, and an estimate of his literary merits; while, again, each group of writers is introduced by an interesting history of the fortunes of the house for which he wrote, and of such among the actors and actresses who shared its fortunes, whose names have survived to the present day. The work is one of considerable interest; it is well edited, and carefully printed, and deserves success at the hands of our neighbours across the water, as well as something in the way of encouragement from ourselves.

The Early Start in Life. By Emilia Marryat Norris. Post 8vo. pp. 384. 5s. (Griffith and Farran.) This story opens well. Alexander Stirling, the son of a Scottish clergyman, is discovered in the library of the old manse, with his elbow resting on the table, his head upon his hand, and his eyes fixed intently upon the floor, thinking. And he might well muse; for he was suddenly called upon to assume a responsibility that is seldom cast upon boys of seventeen or eighteen. Hurried home from school by a message which told him of his father's illness, he had hardly arrived, when the sad end came, and his father lay dead in his bed. And now he is trying to realize to himself the full meaning of the old clergyman's last words, "Alexander, you are my eldest. To you and to your care I leave your mother and your sister and brothers. You are a little more than a boy: be a man for their sakes!" Hardly had the father been laid in his grave before the strain upon the mother's feelings brought on a serious illness; and in a little while she followed the partner of her joys and cares. Thus thrown suddenly upon his own resources, the hero of the story takes counsel with Captain Warden, a retired naval officer living in the neighbourhood. The Captain advises emigration, and in a short time the bereaved family set sail for Sydney. The remainder of the story is taken up with the adventures of the young colonists in Australia, whither they were accompanied by Nurse Hannah and Green the serving-man, the two "obstinate, faithful old things marrying each other," rather than be separated from their master's children. To follow the young people to the Antipodes, would be to write the entire story in brief, and then perhaps to miss the charm with which Captain Marryat's daughter contrives to surround all their adventures in that far-off land. Suffice it that we say in a sentence—they suffered and succeeded, and came back again to the home of their youth with new loves and new friendships, but with old affections for each other all unchanged and warm.

Ernest Graham; a Doctor's Story. 8vo. pp. 354. (Tweedie.) "Trace any guilty pleasure to its origin and you will light upon a glass of wine, brandy and water, or a bottle of Bass. . . . With high, low, rich, and poor, the great principle of taking pleasure is to get partially drunk. Social enjoyment is but another term for alcoholic excitement. . . . Look at pic-nics and croquet parties, how depressing they are before the drink, and how delightful after! . . . Every man who has taken wine until he flushes in the face or feels unusually inclined to talk, is, if he has but taken a single glass, partially drunk." This is the keynote of a very interesting story of London life, in which medical students figure in scenes of excitement, billiard-rooms, dancing-saloons, music-halls, wine-parties, boat races, dissecting-rooms, theatres, police stations, pawnbrokers' shops, hospital wards, &c., but out of the mischief of all which the hero finally emerges, triumphantly.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF ENGLISH LIFE, PAST AND PRESENT.*

THE indefatigable author of "Things not Generally Known," has here presented the public with another of those interesting books, for the compilation of which he seems to possess a special aptitude. In preparing this work, Mr. Timbs has brought to bear a variety of curious reading; and if he is not always so exact as he might be, he never fails to win the attention of his readers. Beginning with the caves of the aboriginal Britons and the remains of Roman, Saxon, and Norman architecture still found in parts of the land, he gossips concerning cottage and mansion, castle and chase, traditions of battle-fields, laws, customs, and ceremonies, fairs and festivals, peasant-life, housewifery, dress and personal ornament, household antiquities, Christmas games in old country houses, historic incidents, romantic narratives, and eminent persons; till, like the antiquary of old, he has gathered together a mass of materials whose very want of order and arrangement has in it much that is quaint and picturesque. Various illustrations of olden times and manners add to the value of his book. One of these we transfer to our pages—a representation of the Fair at Horselydown in the reign of Elizabeth, from a print of the period, probably taken from a picture in the possession of the Marquis of Salisbury at Hatfield. The print gives us a good notion of what a fair was in those days; though as Mr. Timbs, following a local antiquary, the late Mr. G. R. Corner, says, the principal figures seem rather to represent some of the grave burghesses and young gallants of Southwark, with their wives and families, assembled on Horselydown on a festive occasion, on a bright day in summer. The volume contains a large number of strange and curious facts gathered together with no small amount of labour, and presenting to the reader at one view, such a picture of the past as he could not readily bring to his mind's eye without infinite labour, patience, and antiquarian knowledge.

* Nooks and Corners of English Life, Past and Present. By John Timbs. Post 8vo. pp. 372. (Griffith and Farran.) 6s.

New editions of those works by which Mr. Timbs is best known have been issued within the last few weeks, by his publishers, Messrs. Lockwood & Co., and are now on our table. They form a nice little library of themselves, and we scarcely know a more suitable present for a boy than—"Things not Generally Known," two volumes bound up in one; a second series bound in a similar manner; a third series containing the "Curiosities of History," and the "Popular Errors Explained;" a volume about "Inventors and Discoverers;" a capital little volume, "School-days of Eminent Men;" and lastly, "Something for Everybody;" "A Garland for the Year; A Book for House and Home."

HARDWICKE'S SCIENCE GOSSIP.—The second volume of this periodical has reached us, and quite justifies our already-expressed opinion as to its usefulness and interest to students and lovers of nature. It thoroughly fulfils its own purpose; and, without attempting to discuss dry science, is full of agreeable gossip about natural history, microscopic wonders, the marvels of vegetation, fish-culture, and kindred subjects. Among the curiosities of nature and science little known to general readers, which are discussed in its pages, we may mention that of a nest-building fish, and of another fish which brings forth its progeny alive. Indeed, this viviparous fish is one of the latest discoveries in natural history, and comes to us from Vancouver's Island, where it is regularly brought to market for the table. Those who take pleasure in ferns or fungi, or in the aqua-vivarium, either fresh or marine, will find much to interest them in the pages of "Science Gossip;" which is illustrated with wood engravings whenever the nature of the subject requires pictorial elucidation. To all who have a scientific hobby—and there are few of us without hobbies of some sort—Mr. Hardwicke's magazine will be indispensable.

Sir Julian's Wife. By Emma Jane Worboise. 12mo. pp. 424, 5s. (Virtue.) Possibly it has often occurred to young men about to marry, that if they had the opportunity, they would so train and educate their future wives, that they should not only be loving, obedient, prudent, and good-tempered, but that they should become as nearly as possible "perfect." Sir Julian, the hero of Mrs. Worboise's story, has some dim theory of this kind floating in his mind, when he meets the girl who is destined to be his wife. Of course he finds her affectionate, kind, loveable, and womanly, but as to the perfection he dreamed about, if he should win her, that must be put aside. For Sir Julian's wife has a will of her own, and some notions which she, too, desires to carry into practice. So that in the end the pair are fain to accept each other without conditions, and rely upon mutual love, confidence, forbearance, and piety as the only principles to guide them through the journey of life. The story abounds in incident, and is prettily told throughout in that even flow of regular narrative, which, while it forbids the expectation of sensational events, finds scope to record the trials, misgivings, and final happiness of the hero and heroine.

Dame Perkins and her Grey Mare. Told by Lindon Meadows. 4to. 5s. (Low.) This will be a rich treat for children who love a hearty laugh. A gentleman is supposed to tell the story to his little daughter, how Dame Perkins, his old nurse, started from her home, with the intention of going to Worcester market, with a basket of butter, cheese, and eggs, for sale. The old grey mare, lame and nearly blind, is led out through the fold-gate, and the Dame goes on her way. The grey mare, which had once been a hunter, plays her mistress all sorts of naughty tricks, which are here humorously narrated,—

"Among the worst of which Was dancing hornpipes on the road,
And sometimes in the ditch."

All Dame Perkins's endeavours are at first unavailable to get the old mare on; she goes to sleep on the road—stumbling, and smashing eggs at every jolt. At last, however, she hears the huntsman's blast, and, greatly to her rider's consternation, she starts, clearing all impediments, jumping over hurdles, "evading" turnpike-gates, swimming rivers, and finally, after an admirable run, brings in her old Dame—unwilling rider!—victorious at the death. The worthy lady receives, as she deserved, the huntsmen's gallant compliments on her good riding, and the brush, coveted by every disciple of Nimrod.

Lightsome and the Little Golden Lady.

By C. H. Bennett. (Griffith and Farran.) 3s. 6d. "Let us turn the signs of the Zodiac into a fairy tale," we can imagine Mr. Bennett saying to his little son Charley. "Agreed!" exclaims Charley; "it will be such a lark!" And forthwith the artist-author, putting on a comically grave face, invents the story which is here set forth, and afterwards sketches various apparently absurd pictures to illustrate its meaning. Then, having made a new story, which amuses his own child, what is more natural than that he should think it would amuse others? And so, in course of time, the idea grows into a reality, and a book appears with all the glories of paper and print, odd-looking pictures, and fancy binding, to interest and delight young readers at this glorious Christmas time. If the process here suggested was not exactly that to which this fairy tale owed its origin, it does not much matter; for it is a really amusing story, which cannot fail to become as popular as other pen-and-pencil vagaries from the same industrious hand.

Lucy's Campaign: a Story of Adventure.

By Mary and Catherine Lee. (Griffith and Farran.) Fcap. 8vo. 3s. Lucy's "Campaign" was made under rather strange circumstances. While at school at Preston, the news came that the Highlanders under Charles Edward, the Young Pretender, were entering the town. The school-girls were hurriedly sent home, and a carriage came to take Lucy to her father's house, some miles away. The coachman gets tipsy, and the coach is overturned in the miry road—roads were not particularly good in Lancashire a hundred years ago—and Lucy is left in the vehicle while the coachman and the little girl's female attendant go for assistance. Lucy is naturally alarmed: as night comes on, snow begins to fall, and no coachman or maid comes back. At length she is discovered by an officer of the Pretender's army, who, knowing her father, volunteers to take her home. But the army being ordered to Manchester, Lucy is perforce taken thither with the soldiery, and—but for the rest of the story, which is prettily illustrated, we refer young readers to the book itself.

Cassell's Illustrated Penny Readings. The second part of this periodical is an improvement upon the first, many of the extracts being well selected and fitted for their purpose. We notice among the selections Pope's "City and Country Mouse;" the "Purloined Letter," by Edgar Allan Poe; Washington Irving's "Widow and her Son;" and Mr. Thornbury's "March of Prince Rupert." On the other hand, we think that such readings as "Mrs. Brown on the Army," from Fun; the "Gothic Steed," from the "Orpheus C. Kerr (office-seeker) Papers," are rather out of place, seeing that ordinary readers will find some difficulty in conveying to their audience those peculiarities of spelling, and those bits of sarcasm which are only to be properly appreciated when read by eye. The woodcuts by which the various readings are illustrated are capital. One of them, from the pencil of Phiz, we insert—not so much as a specimen of the engravings generally, as an instance of the artist's manner, and his faithful adherence to the spirit of his author. It illustrates a passage from Dickens's "Nicholas Nickleby," and shows us the immortal Mrs. Gamp, the hospital-nurse, at home, taking her sober cup of tea (with the gin in it) uncheered by the presence of the mythical Mrs. Harris. We have little doubt that these "Illustrated Readings" will presently become very popular.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MOORE.—Moore's Irish Melodies, Lallah Rookh, National Airs, Legendary Ballads, Songs, &c. With a Memoir by J. F. Waller, LL.D. (W. Mackenzie.) 4to. pp. 552, 30s. "The world," says Earl Russell, in his "Memoirs of Moore," "so long as it can be moved by sympathy and exalted by fancy, will not willingly let die the tender strains and pathetic fires of a true poet." That there is warrant for this sentiment in the case of Moore, the appearance of this sumptuous volume sufficiently testifies. The book is carefully and elegantly produced, with a portrait of the author from the original by Richmond; several steel plates from pictures by Maclise, Creswick, Cope, Sant, Corbould, Frank Stone, and other artists of note; and a large number of wood engravings of the first class by Linton, Dalziel, Cooper, and Edmund Evans, from drawings by Birket Foster, Harrison Weir, Cope, and others: while, in the matter of paper, type, and binding, the volume contrasts well with the other gift books of the season. In its literary aspect this edition of Moore is in every respect admirable. Beginning with the world-renowned melodies, we have next the national songs, legendary ballads, sacred songs, and poems relating to America; after which comes the poet's masterpiece, "Lallah Rookh," followed by "The Loves of the Angels," and the "Evenings in Greece;" the whole preceded by a lucidly-written memoir by Dr. Waller. In this memoir the writer judiciously dilates on the influence exerted by Moore's lyrics upon the public taste of his time, and the claims which they have upon the admiration of posterity.

FIGUIER'S MARVELS OF SCIENCE.*

THIS book is hardly of so discursive a nature as its title would seem to imply, for it limits its information to, and concentrates the attention of its readers upon, eight subjects only; all of them, however, of primary importance in the economy of civilization at the present day:—The Steam Engine; Steam Boats; Locomotives and Railways; Locomobiles (Portable Steam Engines); Electricity; Lightning Conductors; the Voltaic Pile; Electromagnetism. As 1867 is the anticipatory date of its publication, it was of course to be expected that it would bring its information upon each subject down to the very latest date: and that such is the fact, from what we ourselves have remarked in running cursorily over a good many of its well-printed pages, we find but little room to doubt. In his researches, M. Figuiet goes as far back as antiquity will allow him; his early pages upon Electricity being an example.

The various subjects are also illustrated with no fewer than 400 plates and diagrams, ably executed, all useful, and some of them singularly interesting. We here give one of them as a sample,—the bow of an armour-clad ship, with its spur. This French spur (or "beak," as the ancients would have called it) seems to differ somewhat from that which is being adopted in our own navy at the present day. In beaked galleys more than forty-fold the size of their predecessors, and impelled by steam instead of oars, it seems that we are one day destined to renew the close-quarter sea-fights of classical times, and to supersede the tactics of Camperdown and Trafalgar, by those of Salamis and Actium.

THE ILLUSTRATED MOLIÈRE.

Œuvres Complètes de Molière. Liv. 1-5. (Paris, Ch. Lahure.) 8vo. Molière, the comic satirist, holds a place hardly lower in French estimation than William Shakespeare holds with us; and just as we have a fresh edition (or, at all events, impression) of our immortal bard's works published almost every month as it comes round, so have our French cousins ever and anon to welcome a new edition of Molière from their teeming press. Among these numerous editions, that of Paris (1838), and the more recent one with woodcuts by Phannot, shone conspicuously in their day; but still, they, with their fellows of more or less merit, have left room for us to welcome the appearance of the present edition of the grand delineator of French character in the seventeenth century. A pleasing feature that strikes us the moment we open the book, is the goodness of the paper (though rather thin, perhaps) and the clearness of the type; while again, its exquisite illustrations, evidently from the pencil and burin of some of the cleverest Parisian artists of the day, and minutely correct in seventeenth-century costume and scenery, depict the grouping and character to the very life, and carry us back to the days when Molière himself was taking the principal parts in his own plays, and thereby doubly recommending them to the plaudits and patronage of the Grand Monarque, and his witty and dissolute courtiers. In the five livraisons, or numbers, which we have before us, the order of the plays being observed in due chronological sequence, we have not as yet arrived at some of Molière's very best,—the Misanthrope, Le Médecin malgré lui, Le Tartuffe, and Le Malade Imaginaire, for example: but then we have L'Etourdi, which in a moment made the writer's reputation in the provinces; Les Précieuses Ridicules, a piece of keen satire upon the affected ladies of the day, which trebled the prices at the play-house doors, and had a four months' run; Les Fâcheux, a collection of disagreeable people of every type crammed into a single play; with several others, of either first or second-rate merit ; all of them, as we have already noticed, illustrated, both as to facial character and costume, to the very life. The Notice sur Molière, which precedes the plays, furnishes an excellent insight into the genius, life, and writings of the author: our limited space, however, merely permits us to remark that there have been long-standing mistakes as to the date and place of his birth, which have only been recently rectified. We are glad to see that the editor, following the example of the edition of 1838, has printed the original actors' names after the Dramatis Personæ. When we say that the price of each number is but a franc and a half, something less than fifteen-pence English, we add the crowning recommendation to the work ; an illustration from which we insert.

MOLIÈRE'S COMPLETE WORKS.—(SPECIMEN OF THE ILLUSTRATIONS.)

FOXES BOOK OF MARTYRS.*

THIS important work, issued in penny numbers, is now completed, and forms a handsome octavo volume. The text of John Foxe is annotated by the Rev. W. Bramley-Moore, who adds an appendix containing some of the later accounts of martyrdom for religion's sake. The "Book of Martyrs" has long been a favourite with the people, and, with Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," is to be found in the scanty libraries of the poor, next the Bible. A good well-printed edition of this work being wanted, the late John Cassell projected the present work, which has been carried through the press in precise accordance with the plan of its originator. It is wonderfully well illustrated with large and small engravings from drawings by Gilbert, Du Maurier, W. Small, J. D. Watson, A. R. Houghton, A. Pasquier, T. Morten, and other artists of reputation. One of the larger engravings—illustrative of the barbarities practised on the early Christians at Rome, under Nero Domitius, sixth Emperor, about the year 67—we are enabled to present to our readers as a fair specimen of the manner in which the whole are executed. It was the cruel custom of Nero to have his victims sewn up in the skins of wild beasts, and then taken to the Coliseum, where they were worried to death by furious dogs. At other times the martyrs were dressed in sheets made stiff with wax, fixed to the axles of carriages, and set on fire! "This persecution," says Foxe, "was general throughout the Empire; but it increased rather than decreased the spirit of Christianity." A fine bust of Nero, and a large picture showing the monster playing upon his harp—as Foxe says, though the ordinary account makes him play upon a fiddle—while Rome was burning, after being fired by his command, form the pictorial adjuncts to the terrible narrative. We may add, that prominence is given to the deaths of those whose names are most familiar in the roll of English martyrology; and that the book as a whole is well worthy to take the place so long occupied by the old and incorrect editions.

The Life and Works of Musgrave Lewthwaite Watson, Sculptor. By Henry Lonsdale, M.D. With Illustrations. Royal 8vo. (Routledge and Sons.) How many of all the thousands who traverse Threadneedle Street, on their way to and from the Bank of England, think of examining the frieze on the façade of the Consolidated Bank, formerly known as the Hall of Commerce; or, having gazed in wonder on that fine work of art—Commerce with extended wings giving a welcome to the labourers from all the nations of the world—know that it was designed and executed by Watson, an almost obscure sculptor, who died a few years since without, despite his acknowledged genius, having fairly made his mark upon the time? Again, who among us that visited the Great Exhibition of 1851 does not remember the gigantic group representing the Chancellors Eldon and Stowell, in the central transept? That group is now in the new library of University College, Oxford, and was designed and partly executed by the same sculptor, though his name does not appear on the work, while that of John Scott, the designer of the pedestal, does! It has been fairly said that the world hardly knows its greatest men. Watson, the Cumberland sculptor—the contemporary of Chantrey, Baily, Thorvaldsen, Flaxman, Fuseli, and Northcote—who died before his genius was acknowledged, has at last had justice done to his memory in this elegant and graphic biography. Here we read the story of Watson's struggles and trials, and learn again the lesson that success is not always the meed of the gifted and the persevering. It is a story worth the reading by those who worship the rising sun, and put thorough faith in the "men-who-have-risen" sort of heroes; though it does not reflect much credit on the sculptor's contemporaries, or upon the Government of the day. In Mr. Lonsdale's pages we learn the character of the man, and discover—probably for the first time in the case of many of us—that Watson was an undoubtedly fine sculptor. Nor are we asked to take his biographer's word for the fact, for the book contains photographs of most of his most notable works, the Flaxman Statue, now in University College, Gower Street, among the rest. This account of the Life and Works of Watson deserves a more extended notice than our space will afford; but in a few weeks, if we are not much mistaken, it will be found in every large library and public reading-room in the queendom.

Aunt Judy's Christmas Volume. Edited by Mrs. Gatty. 8vo. (Bell and Daldy.) Of the many magazines for young people, this is most to our liking. It is interesting, tender, touching, true; a magazine which any pure-minded girl or brave bold boy can read and enjoy, and profit by. It is full of stories by such writers as Miss Manning, the well-known author of "Mary Powell;" poems that are pleasant to read and to think over and to sing, on quiet evenings, and bright sunny days when the heavens are blue, and birds are silent; when the wind sleeps in the garden, and the hum of the bees and the whirr of the busy insects are the only sounds that break the stillness; music that is pretty to hear, especially when played by the fingers of those we love; and well-written essays, and notes of nature's doings in the world, and a hundred other attractive subjects, illustrated by the magic pencils of Gilbert, Morten, Pasquier, Grisct, and Miss Edwards: and now that twelve monthly numbers are gathered together and bound in a bright blue cover, they make a Christmas volume that all girls or boys may prize—keeping carefully in the most handy place on the shelves, to show to those among their friends who know how to appreciate really good and interesting books.

MESSRS. BELL AND DALDY'S FINE-ART PUBLICATIONS.

THE list of works published by Messrs. Bell and Daldy includes some of the most splendid art publications ever issued from the press, being no less important for their number than for their intrinsic value.

The first rank, not only among their own works but among all those which have reached us, must be assigned to Art and Song,*—a volume which, regarded either as a collection of the most beautiful poems that have been produced by English writers from the Elizabethan age down to the present day, or as a series of the most perfect examples of the famous painters and engravers of our time, is equally meritorious. It is the most splendid illustrated work of the year. The editor is Mr. Robert Bell, whose Annotated Edition of the English Poets pointed him out as eminently qualified for the post he has here so efficiently discharged. The aim he proposed to himself in selecting the illustrative letterpress was, he informs us, to secure not only excellence, but variety. With respect to the value of the extracts with which he has presented us, he is very successful; for the volume contains the best productions of our best poets. But he complains that he has been less fortunate in satisfying himself that he has succeeded in his second object. His long familiarity with English Poets has reduced him to the conclusion that their views of life were narrowed to two objects—beauty and love. The diversity, however, to be traced in the same idea is so wide, and the individuality which every true poet is able to impress on his work is so great, that in the result identity of theme is forgotten in presence of variety of treatment. Examples are to be found suitable for every taste, even where the aim and object of several poets have been the same. We know no better illustration of this than is furnished by the volume before us. So thorough is the editor's acquaintance with the long line of English poets, that it would be strange if he produced a volume of verses liable to censure for its want of variety. He presents us with almost every shade of every colour, from the dark and lustrous hues of the old poets, down to the lighter and more airy tints of the moderns. And the illustrations are worthy of the text; their collection has been the labour of a lifetime, and deserves attention in more respects than one. In the first place, they are among the best examples of line engraving—an art now almost extinct; they are by the best engravers after the most famous masters; and, lastly—and this is their transcendent merit—they each of them really illustrate the text to which they refer. The care and labour which has been bestowed upon the collection may be inferred from the fact that, occasionally, more than one artist has been employed on a subject, each contributing, as his share, that portion of the work he was best able to furnish. We cannot give too much praise to the printers and binder of this volume. The typography is an honour to the Chiswick Press, and the cover, described as a specimen of superb "walnut binding," inlaid with gold, is in itself no mean work of art.

Perhaps the most essentially English of all our artists is Birket Foster. He has the power of seizing the characteristic points of our home scenery with rare acuteness, and of representing them with singular felicity. River-reaches, feudal ruins, uplands and meadows, clustering wood-clumps and beds of fern, the wild mere, the cultivated plain, the brawling brook, the broad stream—have all had in him an appropriate interpreter. To every scene, moreover, that he puts on the canvas, or places on the wood, he is able to give his own individuality; and, without altering the character of the object he reproduces, he can add to it those elements which go to form "the picturesque,"—a quality which, we may mention by the way, is more abundant in our own scenery than elsewhere. The publishers have therefore done wisely, we think, in issuing at this time of the year the admirable series of photographs now before us;* they are reminders of a season that is associated with our most pleasant recollections. The selection has been well made undoubtedly, including amongst the fifteen subjects here presented to us some of the most charming examples of the artist's pencil. The "Cottage near Huntingdon," and "Hay-making," are gems in their way, and have been most successfully reproduced by the photographer. Some of the genre subjects, also, such as "The Lesson," and "A Seaside Swing,"—

"Down on the shore, on the sunny shore!
Where the salt smell cheers the land;
Where the tide moves bright under boundless light,
And the surge on the glittering strand," are extremely clever and effective. The poems, too, are well selected.

It may perhaps not be generally known that a large number of the original designs of Raffaele and Michel Angelo are preserved in the University galleries of Oxford. These were collected by Sir Thomas Lawrence, who, in his will, desired that they should be offered to the Trustees of the National Gallery at one-third of their value. The offer being declined, they passed into the possession of the Messrs. Woodburn, who offered the entire collection to the then Government for the sum of 10,000 guineas. The negotiation having failed, members of the University of Oxford, by aid of a subscription, set on foot among themselves, and a munificent gift of 4,100*l.* from the late Earl of Eldon, were enabled to purchase them, and thus to earn the thanks of all English lovers of Art. Such is the later history of these priceless works. Their early history is vicissitudinous in the highest degree; but a narrative of their strange escapes does not come within our scope. We must content ourselves by saying that the etchings now before us, by Mr. Joseph Fisher of Oxford,* have been made with so much care and spirit, that all who are acquainted with the originals will have no hesitation in confessing that these fac-similes are the most valuable contributions that could be made by the artist, and form the most useful work for the amateur.

Another attractive volume issued by the same firm is Flaxman's Illustrations of Dante.† At the present time, when we are fresh from the study of M. Doré's wonderful translation of the Divine Poem, it is well to have an opportunity of comparing that work with the best English version of the same subject. There is, of course, vast difference between Flaxman and Doré, as well in what they wished to represent as in the method of representation. The poem is not only the most important production of the Middle Ages, but it is essentially mediæval; it is romantic; it depends for its effect as well upon the reader's acquaintance with the popular theology as upon the merits of the poetry. It seems, therefore, that any pictorial representation must be altogether romantic. Flaxman was eminently Greek in his leanings. He is even said to have been more Greek than the Greeks; and it might be thought that from this well-known tendency of his mind, that he, above all men, would be unable to give visible representation to the work of the great Florentine. His drawing is admittedly always full of grace and beauty; but it was thought he was unable to produce what is usually termed in art "the grand." The Frenchman, on the other hand, does not confine his genius within academical or ordinary limits; he spurns the trammels usually imposed on artists, and creates his own rules and principles of design. He is eminently romantic. It was, therefore, thought that he could not fail to succeed in illustrating the Divine Comedy, which allowed him free scope for the display of his strange genius. This is not the place to point out the various merits of Doré's pencil, or to discuss the degree in which he has failed. But we must observe that in comparing him with Flaxman, the latter, in one respect, has the advantage over his young competitor. Not only has he produced grandeur of effect by the noble simplicity of his treatment, but he has also faithfully told the tale he was called upon to relate. The French work is emphatically "Doré's Dante." The artist takes for his subject only what is congruous with his own notions. He cares less for the exigencies of the text than for his own artistic success. The Englishman, on the other hand, carries us through the Inferno, the Purgatory, and Paradise, and is so clear in his exposition that the story may be understood in all its distinctness, even by a spectator who has never read a line of the poet. He adheres closely to the text, never diverges from the plan he marked out for himself at starting, and thus produces a unity as complete as that which characterises Dante himself. Flaxman's illustration is a triumph of intellectual perception, as well as of artistic skill.

In his Dresses and Decorations of the Middle Ages Mr. Henry Shaw showed himself to be one of our best and most learned archæological artists. That work and others of the same class, which have made him an authority on the subject of which they treat, prove him to be at once a sound antiquary and an inimitable artist. His productions indeed rival, if they do not surpass, the originals he represents. In drawing and in colour, as well as in the accuracy and delicacy of touch which he displays, he is equally great. It was therefore with pleasure we heard he was engaged upon a volume on the art of Illumination.* Well acquainted with his former books, we were confident he would succeed in this. Nor have we in any degree been disappointed in our anticipations. The book now before us gives a complete history of the Art of Illumination, from the early times to its declension at the period of the invention of printing, and reproduces, with marvellous skill, all the most important examples from the richest MSS. that have been preserved to our times. So judicious has the author been in the selection of subjects, that those who become acquainted with this Handbook may consider themselves to be almost as familiar with the subject as men who have devoted years to the study. In most instances there is occasion to say something of the merits of the engraving and printing of a book. In this, there is no need of saying more than that the blocks have been engraved, and the splendid volume has been printed at the Chiswick Press, under the superintendence of Mr. Shaw himself.

Among all the works of various styles and subjects that compose the Vernon Collection, those which have been produced by Mulready are, perhaps, regarded with most interest by the majority of visitors to that Gallery. Mulready was an artist to whom all men, artists and connoisseurs, give praise for the possession at once of wonderful technical skill and unusual intellectual power. However simple his theme, he never failed to produce the effects he desired; however admirable was the painting he produced, there was always "thought" to be detected in the richest example of his genius. He was equally successful as a draughtsman and colourist, as he was in giving expression to the scene he wished to represent. The works left by the great Irishman are too well known to need enumeration, and their excellences are so generally appreciated, that there is no occasion for us to proclaim their merits. Mr. Stephens, in giving us these Memorials, has done a service not only to all who have admired the pictures of Mulready, but to everybody who knows how to value the hidden idiosyncrasies of a painter, as well as those beauties that meet the common eye. Satisfied that the life and works of the artist reflected each other with unusual completeness, Mr. Stephens, in arranging the literary portions of these Memorials,* endeavoured to show "how much the one was the outcome of the other." For the biographical facts he is indebted to many of the oldest, most intimate, and most eminent of the painter's friends. Being himself an accomplished art critic, he furnishes descriptions of and comments on the pictures; while the illustrations, consisting of photographs by Messrs. Cundall and Fleming, are admirable reproductions of the masterpieces of the great originals. Artists seem to agree that Mulready's pictures "do not engrave" well. We are unacquainted with the reason assigned for this fact; but believe the assertion strictly to be true. It was, therefore, very wise of the publishers, instead of giving us a series of woodcuts which might fail adequately to reproduce the originals, to have selected fourteen of the best and most characteristic examples of the artist's pencil, and submitted them to the camera, so that we have exact transcripts of each of Mulready's various styles. Among the pictures thus charmingly reproduced are, "Choosing the Wedding Gown," "Crossing the Ford," "The Wolf and the Lamb," "The Whistonian Controversy," "The Seven Ages,"—"All the World's a Stage," and "Burchell and Sophia." Mr. Stephens's narrative is carefully written, and contains all the facts, concerning this great artist, which are necessary to be known by the public.

The Book of Gems from the Poets and Artists of Great Britain. Edited by Sam. Carter Hall, F.S.A. Vol. I., the Fourteenth to the Seventeenth Century (Geoffrey Chaucer to John Dryden). Vol. II., the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Swift to Burns). Vol. III., Wordsworth to Tennyson. Each 21s. This brilliant and unique selection has very properly been called a book of "Gems;" and never was seen a more richly-stored casket. To the poetry every author of note has contributed his share; and when it is remembered that Freebairn, Greatbach, the Findens, Willmore, Bacon, Roles, and Stocks engraved the drawings of Flaxman, Harvey, Bonnington, Danby, Linton, Creswick, Webster, Leslie, Constable, Smirke and Gainsborough—and that verse has been wedded to picture in no unskilful manner, but little more is required to be said in favour of a collection which has always been regarded as a favourite. That little must be in praise of the binding,—a style which Messrs. Bell and Daldy have successfully introduced, but which no doubt will be at once copied by their more unscrupulous brethren. The style is a rich imitation of polished walnut inlaid with gold. So clearly is the grain of the wood imitated, that but for the difficulty of procuring wood itself of this size, we should pronounce the material to be veritable walnut.

The Choicest of Rembrandt's Etchings. Thirty Photographs taken from the Collections in the British Museum, and in the possession of Mr. Seymour Haden. 4to.

richly bound, price 42s. The last of Messrs. Bell and Daldy's fine-art publications we have to notice—and it fitly closes the series—is the volume containing photographs of the most celebrated of Rembrandt's etchings. The editor of the work supposes that, except by connoisseurs who have had access to his best works, Rembrandt, as an artist, has never been fully appreciated in England. As far as our experience goes, we see no ground for this belief. He is one of those great artists who appeal at once to the most educated and the least informed spectator, and the beauty, grandeur, and originality of idea which we witness in his works are so marked as to be appreciated by all. In the arrangement of light and colour, he has had no equal; and this merit is so apparent, that it can be comprehended by the dullest intellect. Except in respect of colour, all the qualities we admire in the pictures are to be found in the numerous etchings he has left us: "a vagabond liberty, a picturesque disorder, an easy touch, the rarest perception of chiar' oscuro, and the talent of expressing the character of the different ages and subjects which he was treating, by touches thrown in as it were by chance," are some of the elements which give such an inexpressible charm to these prints. Few people are rich enough to become possessed of a collection of these treasures, any more than they are rich enough to possess a gallery of his paintings. Hitherto one had to be content with an occasional sight of them. By the aid of the photographer, however, they may now obtain a work which reproduces the originals with such fidelity and exactness, that in almost all respects they give as good a notion of Rembrandt and his style as if the originals themselves were before us. These thirty photographs are perfect specimens of the art, and are all taken from the rarest and the best examples of the master. To give an idea of the value of the work before us, we may mention that among the portraits is that of Rembrandt himself, in the British Museum, of which only four proofs exist, and that other, even more famous, of Ephraim Bonus—Le Juif à la Rampe—which we consider the most effective portrait in existence; while, among the landscapes, is the fine scene known as "The Three Trees," the most finished of all the painter's landscapes. The descriptions are very clear, and give all the necessary information about the works; and the essay,

* The Masterpieces of Mulready. With Memorials of his Life by F. G. Stephens. Illustrated with Fourteen very beautiful Photographs of his most celebrated Paintings. 4to. bound in cloth and gold, price 42s.

by Dr. Scheltema of Amsterdam, on the Life and Times of Rembrandt, puts the artist's career in quite a new light, proving that the aspersions on the character of Rembrandt, which originated by Houbrake, his first biographer in 1718, are dishonest fables.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE SOCIETY.

AS usual at this season, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge publishes various books for the young, handy in size, well-bound, and prettily illustrated. Among them now before us are—

Illustrated Sketches of Natural History; a second series of descriptions and engravings of animals—under which term are included quadrupeds of all kinds, from the Bear to the Dormouse; birds, fishes, reptiles, insects, and sponges. A good feature of this compilation is an Index, giving in one column the popular names of the several animals, and in another their scientific nomenclature as adopted in the British Museum collection. Numerous anecdotes enliven the text, which has been compiled with much care.

The Sandwich Islands and their People. By M. A. Donne. The recent visit to this country of Emma, ex-queen of the Sandwich Islands, having caused some inquiry as to her native land and people, Mr. Donne has written a lucid account of Hawaii, from its discovery by Captain Cook, in 1776, to the present day, tracing the progress of its inhabitants from barbarity and heathenism to civilization and Christianity. Availing himself of the most recent descriptions of this interesting group of islands in the South Pacific, he has succeeded in presenting a vivid word-picture of their past history, present condition, and future prospects.

Alone among the Zulus. This narrative of a journey through the Zulu Country by a "Plain Woman," about ten years ago, is well worth reading. Previous to setting out for South Africa, the authoress made herself acquainted with the language of the people she was about to visit, so that on her arrival she was enabled almost immediately to understand what was said to her, and to reply to the natives in their own tongue. Her account agrees with that of Dr. Colenso, in representing the Zulu Kafirs as a simple inquiring people, ready to avail themselves of the benefits of missionary teaching and civilization.

The Wreck of the Osprey. By A. H. Engelbach. Here we have the adventures of two boys who went to sea and were wrecked; and—after undergoing various trials, and being left accidentally in the water-logged ship, when the crew went off in the long boat; driven hither and thither on a raft they contrived to make out of boxes and planks from the sinking vessel; thrown half exhausted on one of the Scilly Isles, and put to their wits' end for food and water—are finally rescued, and taken home, to the great joy of their friends, and made heroes ever after. All this, with a moral, is well told by Mr. Engelbach, of whose tales for boys we have before spoken in favourable terms.

George Cox's Repentance; Minty, the Policeman's Foundling; and The Motherless Lads; or, George West and his Brother Tom, are domestic tales of a character familiar to young readers, in which the beauty of kindness, unselfishness, truthfulness, and piety, is contrasted with the hatefulness and positive inconveniences attending vices of all kinds.

How we Dine, by Emma Davenport, is a conversational account of the sources whence we derive our meats, fish, poultry, fruits, vegetables, &c., and the processes necessary to produce glass, pottery, chairs, tables, carpets, linen, and other accessories of the well appointed dining-room.

Linda. By A. G., author of "Maude Grenville." Linda, just blooming into womanhood, is left, fatherless and motherless, to take care of her little sister Eda. They leave their home in the country and go to their aunt in London, where they are rather coldly received. The cheerfulness of the sisters is dashed by this, but the elder, remembering the counsels of her parents, determines to do her duty faithfully and to the best of her ability, and is at last, after many trials, rewarded with the love and confidence of all her friends and acquaintance. The sketches of young people and their ways in this story are lifelike and happy, though we scarcely expect to hear a tall boy of fifteen talking of his companions as his "compeers," as Athelstane Glenmaurice does.

Plain Words for Soldiers. By an Indian Chaplain. These plain words are homilies, pleasantly written, on such texts as "Life a real Warfare," "Drill and Discipline," "The Captain of our Salvation," "The Fight with the World," "Stripes, Badges, and Medals," &c. Though not exactly a book of sermons, this little volume contains much good advice and affectionate counsel, for many others besides soldiers.

The following are uniform in size, price, and general appearance:—

The Confirmation Class; or, the History of a Year, in Three Lives,—a story addressed by a clergyman's wife to village girls.

Fetching and Keeping; a Tale of Cottage Life, by E. J. Kelly, in which the value of seeking the truth and keeping the ordinances of religion is practically enforced.

Father and Daughter, a pretty little tale, showing the uselessness of grumbling and the pleasantness of well-doing.

Victor Leczinski; or, the Road to Siberia,—a story of Siberian exile in the worst period of Russian rule in the unhappy kingdom of Poland, and an account of the trials, misfortunes, and final happiness of a young Pole,—by A. H. Engelbach.

The Beautiful Island,—an exceedingly interesting description of missionary labour and enterprise in far-off lands, by Mrs. W. H. Coates.

Edna Willis; or, the Promise fulfilled. A tale of home life, in which the heroine shows how care, trouble, anxiety, and the crosses of the world are but steps in the path which leads to the land of everlasting rest.

All these little stories are written in such simple language as any child can understand; written also with a purpose, and that purpose the improvement of the minds and hearts of their readers, and the fitting them to perform, in their individual callings and according to their individual capacities, their duty to themselves and their neighbours, and teaching them that true piety is the end and object of life.

Various almanacks, pocket-books, packets of pictures, &c., are also issued by the S. P. C. K.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

HAVING already spoken of the "Leisure Hour" and "Sunday at Home," we may now briefly refer to some of the more prominent books issued by the Religious Tract Society. Of these it may be said, generally, that they are admirably produced in all that respects paper, printing, binding, and illustration; and as regards their literary aspect, that they are deserving of the highest commendation for propriety of diction and correctness in the statement of facts. First in importance among issues during the present season is:—God's Word Written, an attempt by the Rev. Edward Garbett, M.A. to explain and enforce, in a series of argumentative chapters, the doctrine of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Defining the word Christianity, the writer discusses the authority of Scripture, its testimony to its own truth, the meaning and design of revelation, the evidence of history and experience, and the objections advanced against various passages and doctrines; arriving at the conviction of the infallible truth of the written word, and its sovereign authority in all matters of belief and practice.

Scenes from the Life of St. Paul, and their Religious Lessons. By the Rev. J. S. Howson, D.D. This handsome volume consists of fourteen large engravings from drawings by Paolo Priolo, with an accompanying text, descriptive not so much of the special subject depicted in the illustrations, as a commentary upon the life and labours of St. Paul, and their effect upon the people of his day in familiarizing them with the truths of Christianity. Few subjects lend themselves so well to pictorial treatment as the scenes in the life of the great Jewish Convert; and yet, strange to say, few artists since the time of Raphael have selected them for illustration. M. Priolo, in presenting us with these pictures, has done good service both to religion and art; for they are vigorous in treatment and eloquent in design. Originally intended for the "Leisure Hour," they are drawn on a scale suitable to the size of the pages of that publication; the book, therefore, in which they now appear, is a handsome imperial octavo, fitted alike for the drawing-room table and the library shelves.

Autobiography of a French Protestant condemned to the Gallies for the sake of his Religion. By the Edict of Nantes, Henry IV. of France, in the year 1598, guaranteed to his Protestant subjects absolute liberty of conscience and of worship. This liberty they enjoyed for nearly ninety years; but on the 22d of October, 1685, the edict was revoked by Louis XIV. Then began the miseries experienced by Protestants in France. All Protestant worship being interdicted, the followers of the Reformed Faith endeavoured, by every means in their power, to escape to England, Germany, Holland, or Switzerland. Many succeeded in so doing, and to the refugees who found their way to this country we owe the introduction of the silk-trade of Spitalfields and Norwich. But others, who were not fortunate enough to escape from the persecutions of their own king and people, were seized and condemned to life-long slavery. The history of one of these unfortunate victims to priestly intolerance is told in this translation; the truth of the ghastly narrative, which is given in the first person with simple pathos, being confirmed by numerous references to it, subsequent to its first publication in Holland in 1757, by various writers and persons of probity in France and elsewhere.

The Chronicles of an Old Manor House. By G. E. Sargent. Deriving the main points of his narrative from real history, the author of this account of the domestic discomfort and wretchedness experienced by Protestants during the reigns of Henry VIII. and his daughter Mary, has succeeded in presenting a vivid picture of the national distresses and privations of the people in those reigns; and in presenting in plain terms the great doctrines of the Reformation, for the sake of which thousands of innocent men and women in England suffered and died.

Christie Redfern's Troubles. In the narrative we are shown, says the writer of the preface, "how a simple desire to serve God, felt and acted upon by a poor suffering child, may give an almost heroic strength of character, and produce results, the magnitude and grandeur of which are out of all proportion to the feebleness of the means employed." The little girl Christie is made to undergo severe trials and reverses, but finds at last, in her grave, the peace she was never allowed to know in life. This touching story appears simultaneously in England and America, and is published in this country by special arrangement with the American Sunday School Union.

Bible Sketches for Young People. First and Second Series. These two volumes, by the Rev. Samuel Green, are intended to assist young thinkers in their comprehension of Scripture truths, but not to supersede the reading of The Book itself. The Scripture narrative is carried from the Creation to the birth of Christ, all the principal events and their teachings following in consecutive order. A third volume, in preparation, will comprise the example, sufferings, death and resurrection of the Saviour.

The Religious Tract Society also publishes various pictorial cards, &c., among which we may mention two packets of Illuminated Texts, really beautiful specimens of chromolithography; and Scripture Nationalities, consisting of twelve picture cards of the ancient peoples mentioned in the Bible, with elucidatory reading.

MR. NIMMO'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE word "popular" very fully characterises the works issued by Mr. Nimmo, of Edinburgh;—in their literary aspect, useful, interesting, and well-written; in their pictorial aspect, appropriate, artistic, and satisfactory; and in all the mechanical details of paper, print, and binding, good, substantial, and book-like. This is high praise, but not really higher than the works demand; for whether the volumes issued from time to time are elegantly and expensively got-up, like the "Gems of Literature," or simply stitched in paper wrappers, like the "Popular Tales," they are all produced in the best manner, pleasant to look at, to handle, and to read.

Among the books brought out during the present season by this enterprising publisher, we may briefly notice a new Half-crown Series of Reward Books; a series of smaller volumes, known as the "New Sunday School Reward Books," and "Nimmo's Popular Tales." In addition to these, we have a handsome Christmas book, in small quarto, entitled Karl-of-the-Locket, and his Three Wishes, by David Smith, brother to Alexander Smith, the poet; which, in virtue of its greater pretensions in the matters of style, price, and size, is entitled to precedence. Though not precisely a fairy-tale, it possesses all the charm that belongs to that description of story. What were the three wishes of Karl, the fisherman's son, we leave the reader to discover for himself; though we may tell him that the boy's three wishes were granted, and finally recalled at his own desire,—the moral of the tale being that it is absurd to sigh for possessions inconsistent with our station in life. Of course, all ends happily, notwithstanding the apothegm with which the story ends,—“How often do we wish in ignorance for things that would not benefit us, and which we would be glad to be quit of, even if we had them.”

The six volumes already published in the "Half-crown Reward Book Series" consist of the Memorable Wars in Scotland, by Patrick Fraser Tytler, embracing a period of over three hundred and fifty years—1249 to 1603—from the accession of Alexander the Third to the Union: Seeing the World, a young-sailor story of enterprise and adventure, smartly told by Charles Nordhoff, author of the "Young Man of War's Man," and other tales of the sea: the Martyr Missionary, an account of the experience of the Rev. Charles S. Bush, during five years of missionary enterprise in China: My New Home, a diary of domestic incidents naturally and unaffectedly written: Lessons from Women's Lives, a series of biographical sketches of such famous women as Joan of Arc, Charlotte Corday, Lady Jane Grey, and Grace Darling, from the pen of Sarah J. Hale; and Home Heroines, a number of prettily told domestic stories, fitted for the reading of youth. All these books are printed on toned paper, uniform in size, strongly bound, with gilt backs, sides, and edges, and appropriate frontispieces—altogether a very acceptable little library.

The Eighteen-penny Series of Reward Books consists of Bible Blessings, by the Rev. Richard Newton; One Hour a Week, a Bible Lesson for every week in the year; Grace Harvey and her Cousins, a well-told domestic story; Lessons from Rose-hill; and biographical sketches of Great and Good Women; all so handsomely produced that we marvel how so much good paper, embossed cloth, and gold lettering and ornamentation can be sold at the price, and yet yield a profit.

Having already referred in these pages to "Nimmo's Popular Tales," we need only state that five volumes have been lately added to the series; each volume consisting, not of a single story, but ten or more interesting original tales, by competent writers.—These are just the kind of books for travellers, by rail, road, or river, to seize upon with avidity, and read with delight.

MESSRS. NELSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

FROM numerous books published by this firm we select the following for notice, merely premising that they are all produced in that correctly-elegant style, with numerous illustrations, which is characteristic of the house.

Memorials of the Early Lives and Doings of Great Lawyers. By C. L. Brightwell. Post 8vo. pp. 250, 2s. 6d. Among the great lawyers whose lives and doings are here portrayed, we find Sir Thomas More, Lord Mansfield, Sir Samuel Romilly, Sir William Blackstone, Lord Ellenborough, Chief Justice Holt, Lord Eldon, Sir Edward Coke, and other less known worthies. Though the authoress has confessedly derived her information principally from Lord Campbell's "Lives of the Chancellors" and "Chief Justices," she has clothed her narrative in terse, simple, and often eloquent, language.

Truth in the Heart, and other Stories. By the late J. W. Alexander, D.D. of New York. 12mo. pp. 256. 2s. 6d. These domestic stories were written for young American readers, but they are sufficiently apt and interesting to engage the attention of boys and girls all over the world.

Words of Warning. By T. S. Arthur. 12mo. pp. 208, 2s. The benefits of early religious training and moral discipline are well enforced in these stories; though perhaps the "Strange Story," which turns on the propensity of a young wife to appropriate whatever she can lay her hands on—the vice politely termed kleptomania,—is less appropriate for youthful readers, than the other tales in this volume, which is also of American origin.

Woodleigh House; or, the Happy Holiday. 12mo. pp. 220, 2s. 6d. In nine chapters we learn how a family of young people amused themselves by very simple means—domestic events being alternated with some rather cleverly-penned descriptions of woodland scenery.

Zaida's Nursery Note Book. By A. L. O. E. 12mo. pp. 135, 2s. Like the rest of this writer's works, this volume contains many pleasing incidents. It has been written, as we learn from the preface—"by one who, though not herself a parent, has known practically some of the duties and responsibilities connected with the name of mother." Addressed especially to mothers, it contains much valuable advice on the conduct of a nursery, and the care of young children, together with some sensible suggestions as to that education of the mind which really begins in the cradle.

The Way of the World and The Playfellows

(each 128 pp. 12mo. 1s. 6d.) are from the well-tryed pen of Mrs. S. C. Hall, and are marked by the tone of delicate feeling, discriminating attention to the amenities of life, and quick appreciation of character, for which that writer's tales are justly appreciated. They are both illustrated with engravings on steel.

Nelson's "Kitty Brown Series" consists of half a dozen shilling books, uniformly bound, and illustrated with wood-cut frontispieces. Four of them are nice little tales for children, by the author of "Sunnyside," and the other two are descriptive of the architecture of Greece and Rome, and "Triumphs of Modern Architecture," under which latter term are included descriptions of the Alhambra in Granada, the Bridge of Sighs at Venice, the Leaning Tower of Pisa, the Mosque of Santa Sophia at Constantinople, the Castle of Heidelberg, the Kremlin at Moscow, and St. Peter's at Rome. Each volume is illustrated with wood engravings of the buildings described; and, considering the small space at the disposal of the compiler, Mr. W. H. Davenport Adams, the task of compilation is not ill performed, though some very ancient errors certainly remain uncorrected.

The Children's Treasury consist of a Shilling packet of twelve new stories by A. L. O. E., each one in a highly glazed paper wrapper, with a nicely-engraved frontispiece, and sixteen pages of well-printed reading. How all this can be produced at a penny a book, is one of the mysteries of modern publishing.

MESSRS. GALL AND INGLIS'S PUBLICATIONS.

AMONG the Books for the Young published during the present season by this Edinburgh house, are—The Pilgrim's Progress, Sandford and Merton, Young's Poetical Works, Stories and Studies of English History, by Mrs. S. C. Hall and Mrs. Foster; and the Heroism of Boyhood, by Peter Parley, which has already been favourably noticed in these columns. They are uniform in size, style, and price, and are well adapted for Christmas presents or reward books; being all well-printed, nicely bound in gilt edges, and abundantly illustrated.

Next comes a series of smaller volumes, equally well got up; among these are:—

Sketches and Incidents; or, Summer Gleanings of a Pastor's Vacation. By John Todd, D.D. A number of pretty stories, most of them of a religious tendency and American origin; but all of them sufficiently interesting to ensure the attention of readers.

My Brother's Keeper. By A. B. Warner. This is an old favourite in a new dress; a perfect novelette of character and incident, the moral of which shows how excellent a thing is charity, and how hateful is ill-will towards our neighbours.

The Lake of the Woods; a Tale illustrative of the Twelfth Chapter of Romans. By A. L. O. E. "Think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith; let love be without dissimulation; abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good; be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; distributing to the necessities of the saints; given to hospitality; bless them that persecute you; rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep; and, if it be possible, live peaceably with all men." Taking these texts as keynotes, the author has produced a very excellent, and, in many parts, affecting narrative of domestic life in the Western States of America; giving numerous and pleasant sketches of the scenery of that region and supplying characteristic touches of the people who inhabit it.

The Wanderer in Africa, by the same author, consists of a home story, founded in part upon the narratives of Livingstone, and other travellers in Africa, with a special application to the thirty-second Psalm—"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."

A Winter in Spitzbergen. Translated from the German of Hildebrandt, by E. Goodrich Smith. This narrative is carried on in the old-fashioned, but often attractive, plan of conversations, in which a father relates his adventures to his children as they sit round the cosy fire on a winter's evening.

The last of the books in this series, which are all illustrated with full-page engravings, and cuts incorporated in the text, some of them having coloured frontispieces, is Winning Words; a Lamp of Love for the Young Folks at Home; a series of tales, sketches, poems, and pieces of music, originally published in monthly parts, and now gathered together and forming an attractive reading book for boys and girls.

Among the books of smaller size are—Nathalie; or the Broken Spring, the history of a Turkish maiden who was converted to Christianity, translated from the German of Dr. Barth; and Heinrich's Troubles, a story of German life, designed to show how a poor boy became a great and good man. To these may be added various sixpenny packets of Illuminated Picture and Reward Cards, well adapted as presents to young Sunday-school scholars. Altogether, the juvenile books published by Messrs. Gall and Inglis will certainly bear comparison, both for their literary value and their general style of production, with any others of their class produced on this side the Tweed.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT'S JUVENILE PUBLICATIONS.

THE books for boys and girls issued by this firm during the present season, though not very numerous, are all good in their way, and certain to become favourites. The first on the list is, The Lycée Boys; or School-Life in France, by Robert Hope Moncrieff. (1s. 6d.) This is a graphic sketch of schoolboy-life in the public schools of France, and shows how boys can be mean, rapacious, cruel, ill-natured, and disagreeable, without growing up into disreputable men—a fact which writers of schoolboy-life in England generally ignore, but which we all know to be a fact, nevertheless. A very short extract will show the free, truthful way in which this book is written. Lucca, the hero of the tale, is unjustly accused of leading a riot and of having purloined some loose cash from one of the masters' desks. The boys revile him and the masters believe him guilty, and just as he is about to be punished or expelled, the real culprit is discovered; and then, from having been the butt of the school, he suddenly finds himself the favourite with everybody. "All the boys began to be sensible that they had treated Lucca very ill by their unjustifiable suspicions, and most of them took their own ways of showing him so. Boys are not demonstrative, except in some story-books which I have read, in which Master Might-better comes up and embraces Master Goodboy with some such sentimental speech as—'I deeply feel how much I have wronged you, but believe me, dear Goodboy, I am filled with sincere repentance for my conduct.' Now, I have frequently met with Master Might-better, but I never perceived in him any such candour or such a flow of language. Sometimes I have seen him make a sincere but sheepish sort of apology to the wronged Master Goodboy, but more generally his repentance takes a practical shape, and while he does not tell the other that he is sorry, he manages to show it to him somehow or other." This is true of boys, though it is not the way tale-writers generally put it. Like the clasp of the hand and "Well, Tom, old fellow," of Thackeray's friends when they meet after years of separation, it is too true and too simple for fiction. The fact is, English boys and English men are not great talkers—except in fiction, and in such exceptional cases as Coleridge, Boswell, and professional "entertainers."

The Broken Hyacinth; or Ellen's School-Days. Charlotte and her Enemy. Little Pansy; a Story of the School-Life of a Minister's Orphan Daughter. The Mother-Dove, and other "Gems." By the Rev. John Todd, D.D. These four little books belong to Messrs. Oliphant's "Shilling Series." They are each neatly bound in cloth, with an illustration, sometimes coloured, by way of frontispiece. They are written in simple language, and severally consist of one or more stories adapted to the capacities of children from six to ten years old. The last in the list, the "Mother Dove," consists of prettily told anecdotes of animals. The two which follow belong to the "Sixpenny Series," a smaller description of book, with wood-cut frontispieces.

The German Pastor; or Sketches of the Life of Theodore Fliender. In this little book, the efforts of a Lutheran pastor, Theodore Fliender, to establish home missions among the German peasantry, and to ameliorate the condition of prisoners confined in the state jails, is briefly described.

Dick Ennis, or the Village Schoolboy, is an interesting little story for boys, which shows how temptation and idleness may be overcome by piety and earnestness.

Reflections on the Illness and Death of a Beloved Daughter, by the late Rev. George Lawrence, D.D., of Selkirk, is a new edition of a little book which has been for some years out of print, but which, on account of the simple faith and warm piety that breathe through every page, has always been a favourite with a large class of readers.

The Story of Little Alfred. John Heppell; or just One Glass. We bracket these two little books—published by Mr. Partridge—together, because, though they differ in subject and style of narration, they are alike in size and price; and each teaches the value of sobriety, forbearance, prudence, kindness, and steady reliance upon Providence.

Donald Cameron; or Truth winneth Truth. 18mo. (Darton and Co.) The Scotticisms in this story are not, perhaps, what a thorough Scot would consider altogether national; but, apart from this, the narrative possesses considerable interest, for it shows that faith in each other is, after all, the best guarantee of true friendship.

Bibliographie Historique et Critique de la Presse Périodique Française: précédé d'un Essai Historique et Statistique sur la Naissance et les Progrès de la Presse Périodique dans les deux Mondes. Par Eugène Hatin. (Paris: Firmin Didot, Frères, Fils et Cie.) 1 vol. 8vo. pp. 776. In its enlarged title, this wonderfully laborious volume professes to be a systematized and explanatory Catalogue of all the periodical writings of any value published or circulated in France, from the origin of the Journal to our own day, with Extracts, Notes, Historical, Critical, and Moral; Lists of prices that the principal Journals have fetched at public sales, &c.; and we really should be inclined to think that the industrious author must have spent little less than a lifetime upon collecting the materials for its compilation, were we not already acquainted with his still more laborious work—The Political and Literary History of the French Press, in eight volumes. From the time of Bayle, that typical helluo librorum, two centuries ago, down to M. Sainte-Beuve, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, 15th Dec. 1839, we read of aspirations, fondly but faintly breathed, that a work of this description might be accomplished. Bayle, however, found employment enough probably in the curious pages of his huge folios, and M. Sainte-Beuve seems to have been frightened at the very magnitude of such an enterprise: he appears seriously to have proposed it to himself at one moment, and the next to have awakened to a conviction that such a reverie must of necessity be as unsubstantial as the day-dream of the "milkmaid with her pail." Well-based however as his estimate of the difficulty may have been, the work, which would have been a comparatively easy one in the days of Leclerc, Bayle, and Basnage, has been brought to a completion, and that with a masterly hand, by M. Hatin; despite, as he says, the avalanches of (French) journals which have been falling upon the world for two centuries past. He looks, as he tells us, for little of honour from it, and still less of profit: let us hope however that he will gain his due, an ample meed of both. Of such labours as these, a country has a right to be proud. His list begins with La Gazette of the 30th of May, 1631, and ends with La Liberté, 16th of July, 1865; the work concluding with a Classified Analysis of all the Journals, Reviews, and Periodicals that were circulating in Paris in the latter year. M. Hatin's Introductory Essay, upon the Birth and Progress of the Periodical Press in general, bears equal marks of extensive research, aided by several learned correspondents, both in England and elsewhere; and to those who enter upon its details, they will abundantly repay the perusal.

The Republic of Plato, translated into English, with an Analysis and Notes. By John Llewelyn Davies, M.A. and David James Vaughan, M.A. late Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. (Macmillan and Co.) Pp. 302. 4s. 6d. As all the world seem to be turning readers now-a-days, we certainly would like to find them reading to some purpose; and, if we had our own way, would greatly prefer seeing them enjoy a morning with Plato, after the memorable example of the good but luckless Lady Jane Grey, rather than devour the contents of a sensation journal or trashy novel. Though readers are many, however, thinkers are comparatively few; and it is only thinkers that will be able to make anything of Plato's Republic, even when placed before them in this inviting and popular form; for the reasoning throughout is abstruse, the chain of argument continuous and impatient of the loss of any link, and the student must be prepared to mentally carry himself back to a far different state of society, and comparatively primitive times. If, however, the reader fails to follow the philosopher through to his own satisfaction in this his grand inquiry after Justice, it will be no fault on the part of the learned Translators. They have done their best, and very successfully too, to give a lucid, intelligible translation of this, the most valuable of Plato's works; and the Analysis with which it is prefaced, is admirably calculated to facilitate the reader's perception of reasoning throughout. We observe that their "Introductory Notice" begins as follows:—"The Dialogue commonly called the Republic is the acknowledged masterpiece of the larger collection of similar compositions which have come down to us as the works of Plato." Does not this involve a solecism? How can any thing be a part of a collection of things similar to (and consequently other than) itself!

Cecile Raye; an Autobiography. By Mrs. Blake. (Tweedie.) 12mo. pp. 364, 5s. To detail the incidents on which the plot of a story depends is by no means the best way of describing it; especially, as in the case of "Cecile Raye," where the charm of the book depends, not so much on variety of incident as on grace of style and minute touches of character and feeling. In this story Mrs. Blake thoroughly sustains the reputation she achieved in her first story, "Glencora." It is not always that a tale told autobiographically possesses so much of interest as one in which the writer is, as it were, out of sight of his readers; but in this the objection to that manner of storytelling is reduced to a minimum from the very graceful and womanly manner in which the interesting narrative is related. We do not remember to have read a love scene so well described as that in which Cecile is surprised by Frank, in the wood, in the very act of cutting the initials of his name on the bark of an old elm-tree. It is altogether pure and maidenly, without being in the least sentimental; at once touches the heart of the reader, and brings before him a picture far more graphic than that of Mr. Small's frontispiece to this delightful volume: though we do not wish to speak slightly of that rising artist. We may state that, though "Cecile Raye" is published by Mr. Tweedie, it is not a temperance, or even, directly, a religious story; but it is one that will be transferred to a prominent place on the shelves of many a working girl's library.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE'S JUVENILE AND REWARD BOOKS.

DURING the present season Messrs. Routledge have added several volumes to their already extensive list of books suitable for Christmas presents, New Year's gifts, and school rewards. These are published in various styles and prices, generally illustrated with full-page engravings, and always well produced as regards paper, type, and binding. Among the latest are :—

Last Homes of Departed Genius, a series of biographical sketches of poets, painters, and players. The plan of the compiler is somewhat peculiar. He visits Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and the various City churches and churchyards; and whenever he finds names of note on the tombs, or in the records of the building, he forthwith gives a brief account of their original owners. The plan has this advantage, that it is not alone the "best" men who are thus mentioned; and by this means lads get a knowledge of many men not included among those who are said to have "made themselves," or become "eminent," or "celebrated."

The six following books are uniform in size, style, and price, and are mainly intended for the reading of boys :—

Hollowdell Grange, a pretty story of domestic life in a country house among rural scenes, by G. M. Fenn.

Paul Gerrard, the Cabin Boy, a tale of adventure on the wide ocean, brightly told.

Johnny Jordan and his Dog, a narrative of village life, in which our favourite quadruped plays a rather more important part than he has usually done in literature since Captain Marryat's celebrated Snarleyow.

Ernie Elton at Home and at School, two books, which have already been well received, bound in one volume; and in which boys may learn that success at school is almost a natural sequence to obedience and good temper at home.

Tom and the Crocodiles, a well-written West Indian story by Miss Anne Bowman, which teaches the value of self-reliance in times of danger and difficulty.

The Children of Blessing, a series of stories about girls, how they prospered and how they failed, according as they were faithful to or careless of the lessons of their youth or the cautions of experience.

The next four in the list are well written and interesting. Their titles will give a tolerably good idea of their scope and intention—Max Frere; or, Overcome Evil with good, by Miss Pinchard; the Medwins of Wykeham, a tale of home life, by Charlotte Lankester; Ernie Elton at School, a story written to prove that, however idle a boy may be, it is never too late to mend; and Johnny Hartley, the story of a poor lad who got on in life, by reason of his obedience to his master and his adherence to the counsels of those who knew better than himself.

Then follows a series of six similar volumes more particularly intended for the perusal and improvement of girls and young boys, illustrated with coloured frontispieces, and written in a simple, easy style. We have read Elsie and her Pet Rabbits and Kitty's Victory with such pleasure, that, after glancing at the other four, we think we may safely recommend the whole half-dozen.

Last of all, we have the Child's Coloured Gift Book, an admirable volume for children just learning to read—full of picture alphabets, pretty stories, rhymes, &c., with wonderfully coloured illustrations in immense and gratifying profusion.

TOY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

WHAT can we say about children's toy-books? So multifarious, so interesting, so beautiful are some of those lately published, that it is exceedingly difficult to decide upon their merits when compared one with another. At this Christmas season, we are in the habit of drawing the attention of our readers to the claims of the several candidates for the suffrages of infant readers. In the early days of the BOOKSELLER we were perforce—for want of anything better—obliged to praise the daubs that were then produced, and which were, in fact, not very superior to the monstrosities that delighted our own childhood. Of late years, however, as children have increased in refinement and intelligence, publishers have been forced to cater for their improved tastes; till at this moment works of real art are submitted to the critics of the nursery. Messrs. Nelson were the first to show what might be done in the production of beautiful books for children. We gladly recognised this step in the right direction, and we have now lying on our table two good specimens of infant literature from their house, to which we briefly draw attention—Nelson's Oil Colour Picture Books for the Nursery, comprising the "Three Little Kittens," "Four-footed Favourites," "Nursery Rhymes," the "Children in the Wood," &c.; in all twenty-four large pages of pictures in each book, with accompanying verses.

To the Messrs. Warne & Co. belongs the credit of being second in the field in point of time; but in the matter of beauty of production they have certainly eclipsed the efforts of their exemplars. Their books for children are numerous and beautiful. Among them are—Aunt Louisa's London Toy Books, consisting of seven shilling volumes, with such good old stories as "Sing-a-song-a-sixpence," "Johnny Gilpin," the "Wonders of Providence," &c., all illustrated with well-drawn engravings, coloured in a bright and natural manner. These are separately published at a shilling each in fancy covers; and also issued in one handsome five-shilling volume. To these succeed a series of sixpenny toy-books, all containing handsome and well-drawn pictures, admirably printed in colours by Messrs. Leighton. And these again are followed by a smaller collection of thirteen Threepenny-books, also in colours, with text to match. This and the other series are to be had mounted on linen to suit the proclivities of young ladies and gentlemen known in the nursery as "tearers and tumblers." There is a packet of twelve tales for Sunday reading, by the Rev. H. C. Adams, each tale being well printed, and wrapped, with a nicely-engraved frontispiece.

From the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge we have received two capital books for children—Pretty Pictures of Pretty Birds and Buttercups and Daisies. The first consists of a great number of song-birds coloured after nature, with explanatory verses, and the second of a variety of flowers in their proper colours; each book enclosed in a tasteful wrapper, of green leaves upon a glazed white ground.

Messrs. Routledge, usually so prompt in catering for young readers, appear, in nautical parlance, in this instance to have "missed stays," and only appear after a long interval with their contribution to the infant literature of the season. Nevertheless, young folks will welcome their Scripture Gift Book, consisting of the "Alphabets of the Old and New Testament," the "History of Joseph," the "History of Moses," &c., with ninety-six illustrations, printed in colours by Leighton. To this they have added a series of Shilling Toy Books, consisting of tales, nursery rhymes, &c., with pictures printed in colours by Vincent Brooks.

Next come the Sixpenny Juvenile Tales, published by Mr. Nimmo, of Edinburgh. These include our dear old favourites, "Jack the Giant Killer," "The Children in the Wood," "Cinderella," "Little Red Riding Hood," "The White Cat," "Jack and the Bean-stalk," &c., all boldly printed in large readable type, and illustrated with pictures that are well drawn and brightly coloured—just the books, indeed, to suit inquiring young readers.

Last, but by no means least, come the Alphabet of Birds, and the Alphabet of Animals, from Messrs. Darton and Co. When we say that the pictures of the birds and quadrupeds are drawn by Harrison Weir, and coloured after nature, and that each book is in a bright wrapper, and sold at a shilling, we have said enough to recommend them to all young readers.

We might enlarge on this theme, for it is pleasant to talk of what we admire, but our space is exhausted; and we can only recommend book-buyers to examine the books for themselves, and make their purchases accordingly.

MESSRS. WARNE'S BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

HAVING already noticed some of the most important of Messrs. Warne's contributions to the literature of the season, it only remains for us to refer very briefly to the volumes especially prepared for young people by way of gift or reward books. They are numerous and handsome, and seem thoroughly well fitted for their mission, being produced in sets of half a dozen or more, uniform in shape, size, price, &c.

Intended for younger readers than the books noticed on page 1014, we have a series of pretty tales published under the title of "Cousin Kate's Illustrated Library." Among these are Arnold Lee, or Rich Children and Poor Children: a domestic tale intended to show how the youngest and feeblest among the children of the well-to-do may aid in the great work of teaching and humanizing their homeless and destitute neighbours.

Autumn at Harnford is a record of home joys and sorrows, children's difficulties and successes, early piety and its value: a pretty story.

George and Lizzie is the history of three children of different dispositions, the self reliance of the boy being well contrasted with the gentleness and patient kindness of the two girls; and the story shows that the best kind of teaching is that of example.

Helen and Harry; or, Set About It at Once, is a tale of a similar kind, well told; and the Douglas Family shows that, among girls and boys, training rather than merely teaching is the best education.

Of a nearly analogous character are Neighbourly Love, which is exemplified in a series of juvenile tales, by Lady Emily Pepys; and Laura and Lucy; or, the Two Friends, by Charlotte Adams. Both these books may be recommended as reading for studious, home-keeping girls, as they contain many lessons of prudence, obedience, good temper, and other domestic virtues.

A set of little shilling books, of about one hundred pages each, with coloured illustrations, prepared for still younger children, follows. Among the stories are—The Crofton Cousins, Home Pleasures and Home Failings, the Stitch in Time, the Straight Road the Safest and Surest; Truth, or Frank's Choice, and Tales for Village Schools. Each of these little books contains one or more pretty stories by Miss Neale, Miss Marshall, A. L. O. E., and other well known writers for children.

The list is completed by a series of sixpenny books in 32mo. printed from new type, bound in cloth, with gilt edges, and each with a frontispiece in coloured lithography. Their style will be seen from their titles—Jane Hudson, or the Secret of Getting On in the World; Kate Darbey, or It Will All Come Right; Timid Lucy, or Trust in Providence, and so on. A fourpenny edition of this series in fancy paper covers is also published for the convenience of Sunday-school teachers, and others who like to encourage young children, by an occasional gift of an appropriate and inexpensive little book.

TABLE BOOKS.

HARDWICKE'S Autographic Album is a work which will interest readers at every period. It consists of fac-similes, by Mr. F. Netherclift, of the handwriting of more than four hundred and fifty distinguished men and women, of various nations and times. We differ from those who believe they can detect the character of a man in his handwriting, and we are strengthened in our opinion by an examination of this work,—the autographs of some whom we know to have been men of strong will and determined resolution appearing to be produced by the gentlest hand, and those, on the other hand, of dilettanti are characterised by all the vigour and dash we should expect to find in a field-officer's. But, whilst discrediting the inference usually drawn from autographic writings, we can see that much may be learned from specimens which consist of extracts from letters or other documents on subjects on which the writer was interested. Of such specimens this collection is chiefly composed. Mr. Netherclift has done his work well, and has had an able coadjutor in Mr. L. B. Phillips, who has supplied, as an Appendix, an interesting addition, in the shape of a brief biographical notice of every person whose autograph figures in the book.

Routledge's Every Boy's Annual. The twelve monthly numbers of "Routledge's Magazine for Boys," bound together in a bright cover of gold and crimson, make a handsome and attractive volume, with tales by Thomas Miller, W. H. Kingston, and the Rev. H. C. Adams; notes upon conjuring by the late Col. Stodare; poems, riddles, &c., all more or less illustrated with engravings. There is also a handsome frontispiece.

THE CORNHILL GALLERY. Twenty-nine Illustrations by J. E. Millais; Twenty-five Illustrations by F. Leighton; Twenty-seven Illustrations by F. Walker: designed for the "Cornhill Magazine." With Extracts descriptive of each Picture. Imperial 4to. 10s. 6d. each. (Smith, Elder, & Co.)

Two years ago we had an opportunity of noticing these volumes, when they appeared in one volume, as the "Cornhill Gallery." On that occasion we thought it advisable to suggest that the interest of the work would be greatly enhanced if the text to which the cuts were designed as illustrations was appended. We are glad to find that the publisher has now departed from his original plan, and given us the passages illustrated by the artists. He has not only done this; but he has divided the "Gallery" into three parts, separating each artist, so that the public will now have an opportunity of judging of the merits of each.

To turn over the pages of these beautiful volumes is almost as good as reading again the delightful stories which the cuts originally adorned. We are again introduced to May Roberts and Lord Lufton; the sorrows of Lilly Dale once more excite our sympathy, and Adolphus Crosbie's faithlessness our indignation. We are reminded of John Eames and his disappointment, of the Squire and his hopes and fears. We for a second time follow the fortunes of Philip on his way through the world; become indignant at the tricks of the Doctor; sympathise with the little Sister in her self-sacrifice; and finally rejoice when the hero is in a fair way to become prosperous. Mr. Leighton brings us to Italy, and in "Romola" shows us his skill in reproducing mediæval manners and mediæval costume. We listen again to the eloquence of Savonarola: follow the treachery of Tito, shuddering as we contemplate the death he is to meet. All who admired these pictures in the "Cornhill" will do well to procure them in their present form.

Touques of Nature. By eminent Artists and eminent Authors. Imperial 4to. 21s. (Strahan.) Like the volumes we have just noticed, this work consists of illustrations that have appeared in periodical publications. Instead, however, of being confined to the production of three artists, the volume contains sketches from the pencils of a very large number, amongst whom are Holman Hunt, Tenniel, Walker, Charles Keene, Millais, Sandys, and Du Maurier; and it may confidently be stated that, whatever may be the art-predilection of the reader, he will find in this volume something suitable to his taste. Two-thirds of our book-illustrators, indeed, seem to have been engaged in its production; and now that we see the fruit of their labours well printed on good paper, we should say they have here presented us with the best specimens of their skill. It would be worse than invidious were we to select any of them for special praise, inasmuch as they are all good. This volume, including as it does examples of the same pencils as that we have just noticed, may justly be regarded as one of the best collections of English art as it exists in the year 1867. It is a book from which many lessons may be learnt, presenting in narrow compass all the faults and excellences of our school. We should have observed that each picture is set in a neat gold frame.

Idyllic Pictures, drawn by Barnes, Miss Ellen Edwards, Paul Gray, Houghton, R. P. Leitch, Pinwell, Sandys, Small, G. Thomas, &c. Small 4to. 10s. 6d. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.) This volume, although less pretentious than the preceding, has an interest of its own—the illustrations have all appeared in the Quiver, but many of the poems are new. A large number of the illustrations are devoted to home life.

Sketches by Seymour. Oblong folio, 12s. (Hotten.) There is issue of a volume of "Sketches by Seymour" reminds us of the ladder by which Mr. Charles Dickens first became famous—the author was, as it were, called into existence to illustrate a series of sketches by the artist. So successful was he that we scarcely know which is more firmly embedded in our mind,—the portly genial figure of Mr. Pickwick and the lathy form and remarkable dress of his man, Sam Weller, as drawn by the artist, or the descriptions of both by the pen of the author. Both jumped into fame at once, and no representation of Mr. Pickwick but that of Seymour's will ever be received as a genuine portrait. This volume of "Sketches" will become a great favourite with young and old. They tell of the past—of a world the new generation scarcely knows. The bits of humour have never been equalled by any more recent artist; not even Leech ever shot folly with more unerring aim.

BOOKS OF COMMON PRAYER.

WE have frequently had occasion to speak of the careless and unsatisfactory manner in which the authorized presses issue nearly all the Prayer-books published by them. Now we have the pleasure of introducing to our reader's notice some books which will, we think, be found deserving of praise. First from Cambridge we have the "Clergyman's Prayer Book," an edition rubricated throughout in a careful manner, and only requiring a little better presswork and a thicker paper to be all that the most censorious could desire. The publishers appear to have been haunted by the spectre of cheapness, and accordingly have effected savings where none were required. Still, notwithstanding these drawbacks, the Prayer-book is a handsome one; and, if the next edition be printed on a finer paper double the present thickness, but little more can be desired. No. 2 from Oxford,—"The Royal Victoria Prayer Book," is printed in a new type of peculiar cut, and with more than usual care, upon toned paper; the book is rubricated throughout, and has thick red border lines crossed at the corners. The red ink is remarkable for its brilliancy; but here again, we remark that the paper is not so good as we think it should be for a first-class book. This, however, is open to improvement; and, as both Universities have shown a laudable desire to move with the times, we must receive these their first instalments with gratitude. No. 3, although from the publishers for the Cambridge Press, must be regarded as a private venture of Messrs. Rivington. It is printed by Messrs. Clay, Son, and Taylor, a firm which, notwithstanding all competition for fine printing, still maintains its stand at the head of all London printers, and almost always, when we see a remarkably fine specimen of printing, we may be sure that it comes from the office on Bread Street Hill. Like those previously mentioned, this book is also rubricated throughout, but in addition is illustrated with an elaborate set of ornamental borders, and a set of what may be termed initial titles to the principal Services. These have been designed upon wood by Mr. R. R. Holmes, after the style of the fourteenth century, and engraved by Mr. O. Jewitt, the first of antiquarian wood engravers. We shall not have space to describe the whole, and will therefore content ourselves with a notice of a few of the earlier pages. The title-page contains emblems of the four Evangelists, emblems of the Holy Trinity,

Eternity, &c., with a variety of arabesque work. Next we have in a border the Lamb and Flag, the Dove, and an emblem of the Resurrection. The title to the Order for Morning Prayer is rich, but simple in the extreme. A copy of that for Evening Prayer will be found in our advertising pages; that for the Holy Communion gives the Cross surmounted by vine branches and grapes, with the motto Ego sum Vitis, and at bottom, growing corn, with the motto Ego sum panis Vitæ. Unlike many of its illustrated predecessors, this is really a Prayer-book for use at church, and is not a mere drawing-room table ornament.

DIARIES, ETC.

EVERYBODY now keeps a diary—not merely the lawyer and man of business as formerly, but every man and woman, young and old. For the serious person who keeps a private journal recording his frames, feelings, and resolves, there is abundant choice, so that even a whole page may be given to each day's reflections: every size, every shape, and every want can be supplied.

The largest publishers of Diaries are Messrs. Letts, who, about fifty years ago, commenced their series with three different editions, of each of which perhaps 150 copies were sold at 6d., 1s., and 1s. 3d. Now their list contains several hundred varieties, at every price from sixpence to six pounds; indeed it is more difficult to say what they have not than what they have, for their numerous sizes are done up in such an infinite variety of forms, that no want is left unsupplied. A specimen-book showing the sizes and prices may be seen on the counter of every bookseller and stationer; and from the facilities offered the trade by Messrs. Letts, there should be found a good stock in every town. We should mention a Daily Indicator of unusually bold character, which Messrs. Letts have just added to their catalogue of Counting House requisites.

The "Red Letter" diaries issued by Messrs. De La Rue are distinguished alike by the carefulness with which they are compiled and the elegance with which they are printed and bound. There is a finish about them of which most others are deficient. The specialité of the current year is a photograph of star-clusters, and a description of "13 Messier" one of the astronomical phenomena with respect to which our knowledge is at present very imperfect. The small diaries for the pocket, those prepared for ladies, and those for gentlemen, are both printed upon metallic paper, and the pencil-writing becomes permanent as if in ink. Those who may wish to possess an excellent pocket book for business or other purposes, neatly bound in Russia, may order No. 1338, without any fear of disappointment.

The Evangelical Almanack (S. W. Partidge) is, as usual, full of pious wisdom culled from a great variety of sources.

The City Diary (Collingridge, 1s.), interleaved with blotting paper, is from its nature calculated for the meridian of Bow Bells—it is replete with information respecting all City matters.

The Engineer's Office Sheet Almanack (Lockwood) is crammed full of information respecting the strength of iron, measurements of brick and earth-work, and other matters connected with engineering.

The Home Almanack (Ladies' Sanitary Association, 2d.) has a pretty central picture and a good deal of information; it will be a useful addition to our cottage-wall literature.

The Band of Hope Almanack—The British Workman Almanack (Partridge), 1d. each, have some pretty pictures, and a large quantity of pithy moral adages.

The Sunday School Illustrated Almanack is somewhat similar to the above.

The Argosy, a Magazine of Tales, Travels, Essays, and Poems. Vol. II. (Strahan.) The second volume of this well-conducted magazine contains the concluding chapters of Mr. C. Reade's "Griffith Gaunt," a cleverly constructed and exciting story; several poems by Allingham, Jean Ingelow, R. Buchanan, and other popular verse writers; with tales and sketches by Anthony Trollope, Bessie Parkes, the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," and some less known authors; each number illustrated by two or more full-page engravings. The last in the volume is a gem, and is probably the latest published specimen from the pencil of Paul Gray, an artist whose untimely decease in the morning of his fame is lamented by all who understand and appreciate true genius. It illustrates a pretty conceit of Robert Buchanan. Three young girls are standing, on the last night of the year, round a bowl of water, into which one of them is dropping melted lead; as each drop falls, it takes some fanciful shape—a castle, which promises wealth and grandeur for the eldest sister; a ship, which looks like an omen, for the second, of a sailor lover; and a crown, which the youngest and most beautiful is too modest to appropriate to herself. But—

"Time went on, one maiden got:
Her landsman, one her sailor;
The lackey of a country Count—
The skipper of a whaler!
And Molly has the crown, although
She unto few can show it—
Her crown is true-love, fancy-wrought:
Her husband, a poor poet!"

Good Words for 1866. Edited by Norman Macleod, D.D. (Strahan and Co.) The new volume of this excellent magazine contains more than an average number of "good words," in the way of continuous tales, apt and telling sketches of life and manners, thoughtful essays, practical hints, and pretty poems. The two principal stories continued and completed in the volume are, "Madonna Mary," by Mrs. Oliphant; and "Ruth Thornbury," by William Gilbert; while such articles as a "Night with the Ramsgate Life-boat," by the Rev. J. Gilmore; "From the Ocean to the Sea," by the Rev. Charles Kingsley; and "Homeward," a series of word-pictures of Eastern travel by the Editor, sustain the reputation of the periodical for possessing the best kind of writing that can be procured from the best class of authors. Add to this an abundant supply of first-class engravings, and we have a volume of real value and surpassing interest.

Peter Parley's Annual. (Darton and Co.) This favourite annual makes its appearance under the auspices of its old publisher, John Darton, and its original editor, William Martin, with something more than its usual claims to patronage. Tales, sketches, and poems succeed each other in its pages, all made gay by engravings, some in colours.

The Quiver; an Illustrated Magazine for Sunday and General Reading. (Cassell and Co.) This magazine thoroughly maintains its character for good reading and good illustrations; the monthly numbers for the year making a really handsome and portly volume. Among the writers who have contributed to this volume we find Mrs. Balfour, Walter Thornbury, Dr. Waller, the Rev. Hugh Stowell Browne, Rear-Admiral Williams, and others whose names are less familiar to the religious public. The great features of the volume are "The Honour of the Family," a good domestic story; the "Deeper Depth," a series of scenes of real life among the very poorest of the poor; and "Kate Ormond's Dower," a really well-written story for the young. These and other articles are graphically illustrated by wood engravings, from drawings by G. J. Pinwell, W. Small, Justigne, and other well-known draughtsmen.

The Sunday Magazine for 1866. Edited by Thomas Guthrie, D.D. (Strahan.) If only for the "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood,"—a series of admirably written articles by the "Vicar,"—this volume of the "Sunday Magazine" would be extensively patronised: but the reader will find, in addition, numerous important papers by the Editor, under the generic title of "Our Father's Business, or Methods to do Good;" a series of intensely interesting articles by Dr. Alexander, on the "Heroes and Martyrs of the Reformation in Italy;" several argumentative and didactic papers by Dr. Hanna, on the "Life of Our Lord;" and various important essays, sketches, and poems fitted for Sunday reading; the work being well illustrated by engravings from sketches by Birket Foster, J. Wolf, the late Paul Gray, and other competent artists.

The Family Treasury of Sunday Reading. Edited by the Rev. Andrew Cameron. (Nelson.) "The Draytons and the Davenants," a story of the later Puritans, by the author of the "Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," forms the grand pièce de résistance in this volume; but the magazine also contains numerous papers on practical devotion, biography and personal reminiscence, Biblical and theological discussion, ecclesiastical and missionary notanda, poems, miscellanies, and a department especially devoted to the children. The illustrations consist of views in the Holy Land, printed from engraved steel plates, with a few woodcuts of good character.

Noticeable among illustrated serials, at this season appearing as completed volumes, we may mention the British Workman (Partridge, 1s. 6d.), a monthly magazine well-adapted for the perusal of thoughtful operatives; containing numerous articles of interest on social topics, with well-selected extracts from the writings and speeches of philanthropists and others; the principal subjects being graphically illustrated with wood-engravings from drawings by John Gilbert, Henry Anelay, and other artists of reputation. The tone of the book is eminently moral, the progress of the working-man in all that tends to his comfort and advancement being the aim of the editor and his coadjutors.

The British Workwoman (Hall & Co., 1s. 6d.) is a publication, of somewhat similar character, prepared especially for the wives and daughters of the working and lower middle classes. It has now entered upon its fourth year, and seems likely to prove very useful, being well written and prettily illustrated.

The Band of Hope Review. (Partridge.) Pt. VI. 1s. This periodical is published in monthly numbers at a halfpenny each, and consists of numerous tales, poems, and excerpts, fitted for the reading of working boys and girls; nearly every page containing an engraving appropriate to the design of the work.

The British Juvenile (Smart and Allen) is a penny monthly, containing original prose and verse, with large bold engravings of such subjects as are likely to prove interesting to children.

Pleasant Hours, a magazine of amusing and instructive reading for young people of both sexes, abundantly illustrated, contains papers on natural history, travels, and adventures, Scripture characters, tales and allegories, poetry, riddles, &c.; and, like the magazines already noticed, appears to enjoy a fair share of public favour, for we observe the issue for December to be its seventy-first monthly number.

The Infant's Magazine, conducted by the editors of the "Children's Friend," and issued by the same publishers, is intended for little ones just learning to read and spell. Being full of suitable engravings, large and small, of animals, flowers, &c., with plenty of capital and large text reading lessons, it serves both as a school and play-book; each month's number containing something pretty and novel to attract the attention of "little toddlers," "wootsey-pootsey," and the other denizens of the nursery.

The Children's Friend. Vol. VI. (Seeley and Co., and S. W. Partridge.) The fact of this magazine having completed its sixth year, is sufficient warrant for our believing that it completely fulfils its purpose, which is that of providing attractive reading of a religious character for children of from six to twelve. The tales, sketches, and anecdotes are short and pithy, while poetry, of which all children are fond, forms no small portion of the contents of each monthly number. Various large and well-drawn illustrations are interspersed in the text, and several pictorial proverbs or hieroglyphical readings serve to enliven the graver portions of the work.

The People's Magazine. The first part of this new magazine will be in the hands of our readers next week. From a cursory glance at its contents, we are disposed to think it will be successful, and that, under the sanction of the venerable Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, it will circulate in every parish, and become, as its name implies, a genuine "Magazine for the People."

Annals. Beeton's, Cassell's, Routledge's, Warne's, and numerous other works of a similar character, should have been noticed: but to do justice to their respective merits demanded more space than that which was at our disposal; we must therefore refer readers to our advertising pages, where the various merits of each are fully disclosed.

Puniana. We have received from Mr. Hotten a collection of "riddles, conundrums, jokes, sells, &c.," which, under the above title or "Thoughts Wise and Other-Wise," seems to possess great merit; but as it only reached us at the moment of our going to press, we defer our examination of its claims to popularity till some more convenient season. Meantime, many of our Christmas readers will be glad to know of the existence of a work, which seems specially adapted for after-dinner wits and smart young ladies.

The Globe Shakespeare. The best edited text, and the best printed small edition, is now also the cheapest; the spirited publishers, determined to keep the market in their own hands, have issued a half-crown edition, printed precisely in the same style of elegance as before.

Chromo-lithographs.—Mr. L. Prang, of Boston, U.S., forwards us one of the most successful imitations of oil painting we have seen. It is a group of four chickens, from a picture by Tait; the colouring is equal to the original, and even the very texture of the canvas has been transferred. Mr. Prang is best known in this country by his beautiful copies of leaves and fruit, mostly printed on small cards.

Photographs.—From Mr. Gutekunst, of Philadelphia, the first photographer in the United States, we have received a large-sized portrait of General U. S. Grant, and a number of smaller portraits, excellent alike for their manipulation and the artistic pose of the sitters, by means of which their most striking characters are delineated.

Illuminated Texts.—Messrs. Warne send us three Illuminated Texts for Christmas: two from the Christmas Hymn, and one with the motto, "On Earth Peace, Good Will toward Men."

Many more books have come to hand than we have been able to notice this month. We are also compelled to omit our usual summary of literary intelligence.

"These little poems, in various shapes and forms, have passed through eight editions. This fact, and another—that they are from the pen, or rather from the head and heart, of one of the best women and best writers of whom the age can boast—is sufficient recommendation to our readers without a word from us."—Art Journal.

GIFT-BOOK.

Just published, price Two Guineas, demy 4to, cloth gilt, printed on Toned Paper; or in handsome morocco, Three Guineas,

The Oberland and its Glaciers,

EXPLORED AND ILLUSTRATED WITH ICE-AXE AND CAMERA.

By H. B. GEORGE, M.A., F.R.G.S.,

Fellow of New College, Oxford; Editor of the "Alpine Journal."

WITH TWENTY-EIGHT PHOTOGRAPHS

Illustrative of the various Glacial Phenomena, and of the Scenery described.

By ERNEST EDWARDS, B.A.

And a Map of the Oberland.

"In this volume Mr. George has presented an agreeable and handsomely embellished drawing-room book. The photographs are excellent. Glacier scenery is peculiarly suited for photographic representation, as it displays no great variety of colours, and the contrasts of light and shade are strong on tolerably fine days."—Athenæum.

"The combination of the ice-axe and camera referred to in the title-page took place in the persons of Mr. H. B. George, an experienced and accomplished mountaineer, and that excellent photographer, Mr. Ernest Edwards. . . . We have here a clear and very complete summary of glacier phenomena, and of the explanations of them propounded by scientific men. The interest of Mr. George's lucid exposition is greatly enhanced by the illustrations of Mr. Edwards. They are always beautiful, and often exceedingly instructive."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Edwards is an excellent photographer, and his work, much of it done under serious difficulties, is admirably executed, the photographs far surpassing the average of photographic book illustrations. . . . They are well printed, and neatly mounted on toned paper similar to that on which the book is printed. The whole is beautifully printed and bound, and forms one of the most handsome quarto volumes we have seen for some time."—Photographic News.

"We have the Oberland Glaciers brought home to us with all their most characteristic details. . . . Among volumes illustrated by photography, we must rank this work as the chief. . . . Points of view have been chosen with equal eye for the picturesque and for the requirements of the student."—Examiner.

"No artist's pencil could have portrayed these icy regions with such fidelity as has here been attained by means of the photographer's camera."—Morning Post.

"The photographic illustrations in this volume are unique. The representations of 'Dirt Cones,' 'Glacier-tables,' 'Ice-needles,' 'Active and Extinct Moulins,' and various other glacial specialités, given with all the truth of reality, are perfect. . . . Mr. George does his best to render the theory of glaciers intelligible to the meanest capacity, and he makes things pleasant by quoting a great deal of poetry of a decidedly romantic description. Accordingly we accept his lucid though brief theoretical disquisition with much gratitude, and follow him with pleasure through the more practical parts of his book."—Pall-Mall Gazette.

"It is a very beautiful book, excellently well written, with a large amount of information, and will, we hope, become a general favourite. It has also a good map."—Literary Churchman.

"Mr. George has been so happy as to produce the best popular exposition yet of the glacial theory, so largely verified, advanced, and enriched by Dr. Tyndall. . . . The photographs are altogether surprising for truth of general effect and for minute fidelity."—Nonconformist.

"Mr. George and his photographic companion, Mr. Edwards, deserve the greatest credit for producing this attractive volume."—London Review.

"The book is a monument of their success."—Spectator.

"Not only as a narrative of adventure, but also as an intelligent guide-book, we commend the 'Oberland and its Glaciers' as a work to be read for the interest which attaches to its matter, and to be looked at for the beauty of its photographic illustrations."—Art Journal.

"As pretty a volume as need ever nestle among the gifts under a Christmas-tree, or greet a fair lady with good wishes on the opening morning of the new year."—The Reader.

"The artists in this book are new to us. They seem to be all Scotchmen, and not one of them but exhibits marked powers. The woodcutters are also all Scotchmen; so is the printer, so is the publisher. The volume is a highly creditable one to Scotch taste, artistic feeling, and liberality, and to every body concerned in its production."—Saturday Review.

SELECT LIBRARY OF FICTION.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS PER VOLUME.

The best, cheapest, and most popular NOVELS published, well printed in clear, readable type, on good paper, and strongly bound.

Of the many cheap editions and reprints of Works of Fiction, there is none which better deserve the extensive support which they receive at the hands of the public than the series in course of issue under the title of the "Select Library of Fiction." The number of volumes already published in this form is about one hundred, and they include the whole of the works by Charles Lever, four by the Author of "John Halifax;" and also by Anthony Trollope, and many others well known to readers of works of Fiction. In addition to the literary merits which the works possess in themselves, they present to the reader the important advantage of being printed in clear and excellent type, on good paper, differing in this respect very materially from some of the cheaper reprints, which fall to pieces in the process of reading, and which so sorely try the eyesight, especially of those who are accustomed to read in railway carriages.—The Observer.

ILLUSTRATED WORKS.

NATURE AND ART.

Illustrated by Chromo-Lithography, Photo-Lithography, and Wood Engraving.

AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL.

Published Monthly, Price One Shilling.

THIS new Monthly Periodical is essentially pictorial. The subjects for treatment being chiefly drawn from the beauties and curiosities of NATURE AND ART. In the Artistic Department, no pains are spared and the illustrations in CHROMO and PHOTO-LITHOGRAPHY, for which the publishing Firm have so wide a repute, offer features as attractive as they are novel. The lovely hues, for instance, found on birds, insects, and leaves, being faithfully rendered by the former of these processes, may give fresh stimulus to that taste for closely observing natural objects which has of late years been wonderfully developed; while subjects hereafter mentioned, whose representation or illustration demands accuracy of form rather than of colour, offer a wide scope for the employment of the latter agency.

In the LITERARY DEPARTMENT, the Proprietors of the Magazine have secured the co-operation of artists, naturalists, sportsmen, travellers, and literary men of recognised ability and position, and they look with confidence to receiving most interesting communications through their widely-spread connections in all parts of the world.

The many spirited sketches and highly-interesting descriptions of wild and romantic scenes by officers on foreign service, which are frequently placed at the disposal of the Publishers, assure them of a class of correspondents enjoying peculiar opportunities for observing Nature.

A portion of the text will embody popular Essays on SCULPTURE, PAINTING, and SCIENCE, illustrated also with coloured sketches or drawings. The Editor has accepted an admirable series of articles, especially interesting to Artists, on WILD FLOWERS and the localities they inhabit, and another on Sketches from Nature in Water-Colours, which, while so illustrated as to please the general reader, will supply a course of really sound training in form and colour to the student, and thus lend the Fine-Art Department of the Magazine an educational value in addition to its ordinary one.

A special department will comprise a series of practical hints by an accomplished professor for the direction of students interested in forming collections, and in noting the phenomena of NATURAL HISTORY.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES on Fine-Art Topics of the day, Reviews, and regular reports on ART-PROGRESS at Home and Abroad, will find their place in this Magazine. DECORATIVE ART in its higher branches must prove a fertile subject, and one which the resources at their service will enable the conductors to treat prominently; and these same resources may be no less available, should occasion offer, to assist in guiding the Art labours of the boudoir and the work-table.

THE FINE ARTS QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Nos. I. and II. New Series. Price Six Shillings each. Edited by B. B. Woodward, Esq., Her Majesty's Librarian and Keeper of Prints and Drawings at Windsor.

THIS Periodical was established to meet the requirements of collectors, connoisseurs, and all who are interested in the cultivation of the Fine Arts. It treats of Art in general, but more particularly of the Arts of Design,—Architecture, Sculpture, Painting, and Engraving; of Photography, so far as it is employed as a substitute for Drawing and Engraving; and of Industrial Art.

The illustration of the History of Art, and of its various schools, from original monuments and records; and of the lives of Artists of every country—but particularly of our own—with their works, are its chief object; subordinate to which is the historical and critical description of Galleries, Collections, and Special Exhibitions of Works of Art; and of Buildings, Sculptures, Pictures, &c., deserving separate notice.

Important works on these subjects are reviewed at length; and all publications relating to them, whether English or Foreign, together with recently-published Engravings, are periodically noticed.

Practical improvements in the materials and processes employed in the Fine Arts; in the methods and appliances of Art-Instruction; and in the application of the Arts of Design, are fully described.

Each Number will contain notices of all events connected with the Fine Arts.

Illustrations, in Lithography, Chromo-lithography, Illumination, Photo-lithography, various styles of Engraving, and in Photography, are given whenever they are required.

Coloured Maps will be given, showing the geographical range of the different groups, and their relations to other groups, as well as to extinct species.

TI-PING TIEN-KWOH; Or, the History of the Tiping Revolution, including his own Adventures. By an English Ti-ping.

THIS Work is written in accordance with instructions from the Ti-Ping authorities.

It contains the Personal Adventures and Practical Experience of the Author during four years' service and intercourse with the Ti-Pings in China; besides which it includes—A complete History of the Revolution; its Christian, Political, Military, and Social Organization. A full description of its extraordinary Leader, Hung-siu-tshuen, and his principal chiefs. The Rise, Progress, and Present Circumstances of the Movement; together with its bearing and influence upon the welfare of the 360,000,000 inhabitants of China, and the general interests of Great Britain. With a thorough Review of the Policy of the British Government towards China; including the Intervention and Hostilities against the Ti-Ping Patriots, who originally, through their acceptance of Christianity, and abandonment of Idolatry, revolted against the Manchoo-Tartar Government.

Throughout the Work there is much information regarding the vast Chinese Empire, the Character, Customs, and Position of its interesting People. As these are subjects which have come largely under the Author's observation, they are presented, in connection with his own remarkable Adventures and Travels about that little-known country, in the novel form of a Personal Narrative, combined with the History of the great Ti-Ping Revolution.

It contains upwards of 800 pages, 2 vols. super-royal 8vo, 8 beautiful Chromo-Lithographs, 10 Tinted Lithographs, Wood Engravings, Maps, and other Documents. Price 32s., Bound in Cloth.

The CATHEDRAL or ABBEY CHURCH of IONA.

SOME years ago the BISHOP of ARGYLL AND THE ISLES, anxious to retain the present aspect of the Abbey Church on the Island of Iona (which was fast yielding to the influences of time), employed the Messrs. BUCKLER, the well-known Antiquarian Architects of Oxford, to visit the island, to make drawings of the ruins, and to write a detailed description of them. These gentlemen remained some weeks on the island, and accomplished their work carefully.

No use has hitherto been made of these drawings or description, but, as it seems a pity that they should be comparatively lost, the Messrs. DAY have undertaken to publish the Drawings (4 Views and 14 pages of detail Drawings) and the Messrs. BUCKLER'S Descriptive Letterpress, accompanied by an Introduction, written by the Bishop of ARGYLL AND THE ISLES—500 Subscribers' Names having been obtained already.

The work has been produced in the best manner; size, 4to, demy; in Ornamental Binding. Price One Guinea.

LITERARY WORKS.

ROUGH NOTES of an OLD SOLDIER,

During Fifteen Years' Service, from Ensign G.B. to Major-General C.B.

DEDICATED TO THE YOUNG OFFICERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

These Volumes do not present to the reader a mere record of the military glory which was achieved by England during the most eventful period of her history as set forth in official documents and historical memoranda, but is the simple Narrative of a Soldier who witnessed what he tells—who, regardless alike of favour or of anger, speaks from a PERSONAL experience, which was acquired during a lengthened period of service, within which deeds were enacted that proved the sterling might of England, and eventually placed her in that proud position which she now occupies amongst military nations. The stirring scenes of battle and siege during many years in the Peninsula, and of our Eastern conquest in Ava, the hardships of a rebellion during Canadian winters, the campaign in the Crimea, together with the Siege of Sebastopol, are one and all familiar to the Author. In each of these he bore a part, discharging the duties that were assigned to him with a buoyant spirit; and he now tells the story of what he saw, by land and sea, with a light heart, and in his own graphic way, full of interest and amusement.

With Vignette Portrait, 2 vols., handsomely bound and embellished, price One Guinea.

LIVE COALS; OR, FACES FROM THE FIRE.

By MISS BUDGEN ("ACHETA"),

AUTHOR OF "EPISODES OF INSECT LIFE," ETC.

The "Episodes of Insect Life," published some years since, will pleasantly recall to the mind of every one acquainted with that work the power of graphic description, the playful fancy, the fertile imagination, and the humorous and artistic pencil, of its gifted Author. The talent and genius therein displayed won, unsolicited, from the late Prince Consort a graceful acknowledgment in the presentation to the Author of a copy of a book, the "Natural History of Deeside," privately printed by command of her Majesty the Queen.

The Work announced above comprises a series of Thirty-five highly imaginative and humorous Sketches suggested by burning Coals and Wood, accompanied by Essays, descriptive and discursive, on—THE IMAGERY OF ACCIDENT, THE FIRE IN A NEW LIGHT, THE FIRE AN EXHIBITOR, THE FIRE A SCULPTOR.

Besides that of the Royal Duke who has most graciously accepted its dedication, the Work has won the admiration of an influential circle of friends, who have given their names as subscribers.

The Sketches are drawn on stone, and printed in colours in the highest style of art. The Work, handsomely printed in antique-faced type, forms an elegant quarto volume, and will doubtless prove one of the most original and entertaining books ever placed on the drawing-room table.

PREBENDARY OF ST. PAUL'S, AND RECTOR OF STOKE NEWINGTON.

Three-and-twenty exquisite full-page engravings after pictures and drawings by SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, HARRISON WEIR, ANSDALL, TAYLER, and HUARD, with numerous vignettes and tailpieces, adorn the book, the paper and printing of which are sumptuous, as a volume adapted and intended as a gift or prize-book should be. Its binding, too, with a rich-coloured medallion in brilliant enamel of a spaniel's head bearing a scarlet cap, is tasteful and artistic in the extreme."—Morning Advertiser.

OUR CHILDREN'S PETS.

By JOSEPHINE.

Illustrated by HARRISON WEIR and others.

"This handsome quarto is one of the most attractive children's books we have met with during the present season, or indeed any other. It is attractive internally as well as externally, for it is full of charming little stories, sketches, and scraps of poetry, written with the view of instilling into the minds of the young consideration and love for dumb animals. The volume contains a large number of beautiful illustrations, by BIRKET FOSTER, HARRISON WEIR, W. HUNT, J. GILBERT, and other well-known draughtsmen. The binding is exceedingly pretty, and to some extent quite novel. The young folks will certainly be delighted with 'Our Children's Pets.'"—City Press.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET

A Poem.

By G. WASHINGTON MOON, F.R.S.L.

Author of "The Dean's English."

THIRD EDITION.

Extracts from Reviews.

"Her Majesty has graciously been pleased to accept a copy of Mr. Washington Moon's poem, 'Elijah the Prophet,' an epic poem of great merit, exhibiting powers rarely equalled for sublimity and strength, and breathing a noble and an elevated spirit which deserves all praise."—Court Journal.

"The poem is one series of beautiful and brilliant gems and profound thoughts, set in pure and ornate language."—St. James's Chronicle.

"It is an epic poem of great beauty and power."—Weekly Record.

"A poem of unusual interest and beauty."—Evangelical Christendom.

"The most noticeable poem of the season."—Bookseller.

"The grandeur of the subject is well-nigh unsurpassed, and the poem is not unworthy of the subject."—North British Daily Mail.

"We hasten, as in duty bound, to say that we recognise the 'Elijah' of Mr. Moon as really a sacred epic of the highest order."—The Orb.

"In this work the library has one of the most valuable additions that has for many years emanated from the press."—Oxford University Herald.

"A work that may stand in a high place among the specimens of modern English classical literature."—Court Circular.

"The magnificent epic poem before us is one of those rare issues which, like wandering comets, appear only at long intervals. Every page teems with high poetic beauties, often soaring to the sublime. The author has approached his subject with studied care, and has mastered it in a style so grand, that little is left to be desired further than that the poet may attain the position which his brilliant epic entitles him to hold."—Illustrated Weekly News.

"We are bound to say that Mr. Moon's poem is a great work. There is a grandeur and sublimity that reminds one of Milton and of Young, even at their best, in the poet's description of the Day of Doom, and also of the translation of Elijah. It is awarding no slight merit to the author to say that his whole poem breathes the purest morality and the loftiest devotion. Going through it is like going through a cathedral, where, as the grand music rolls on the ear, the eye is almost everywhere enchanted with visions of unearthly interest and scriptural beauty breaking in richest colour from its storied windows, while the soul is touched and stirred with the deep estimations of religion."—Church and School Gazette.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.

THE TRANSLATION OF ELIJAH.

No harness fettered them ; no curb nor girth
Restrained the freedom of those glorious ones,
Nor traces yoked the chariot at their heels ;
It followed them, as planets follow suns
Through trackless space, in their empyreal courses ;
For lo ! the fiery spirit of the horses
Was as a mighty presence in the wheels,
And in the dazzling whirlwind which behind them flew
And caught Elijah up, as sunlight drinks the dew.
Away, away to Heav'n those steeds upbore him ;
Leaving the clouds as dust beneath their feet.
Wide open flashed the golden gates before him ;
And angel forms of splendour rose to greet
The favoured prophet. Oh, the rapture sweet !
The ecstasy most thrilling which came o'er him :—
But thoughts are voiceless when we soar thus high ;
And, like the lark that vainly strives to beat
With little wings the air and pierce the sky,
We fall again to earth. Elisha there
Wept o'er his loss, but wept not in despair.

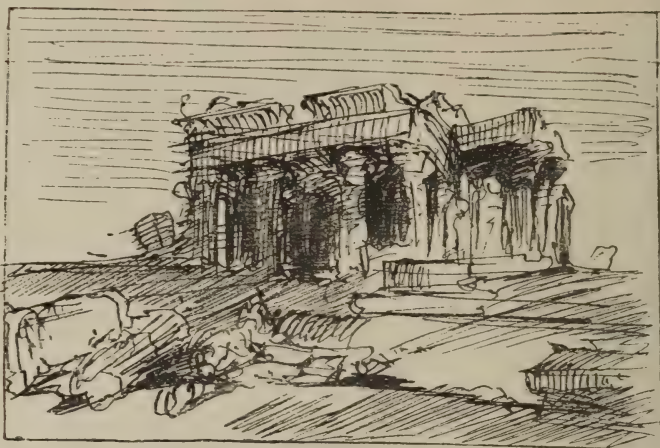

No ; though a few regretful teardrops fell,
He knew that with Elijah all was well ;
For through the open gates of Heav'n there rang Strains of the song of welcome which the angels sang.
O who can picture that transcendent sight !
Who fitly can relate the wondrous story !
Who paint the ærial beauty of that night,
Or sing the fleetness of those steeds of glory
And God's triumphant chariot of light
Entering Heav'n ! Never in depth or height
Had mortal gazed on such a scene before ;
Never shall years, how long soe'er their flight,
The solemn grandeur of that hour restore
Till heav'n's last thunder peals forth " It is done !"
And the archangel, dazzling as the sun,
Descends to earth ; and, standing on the shore
Of ages, swears with upraised hand by ONE
Who lived ere time its cycles had begun,
That time shall be no more.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MOORE.

WITH AN ORIGINAL MEMOIR BY JOHN FRANCIS WALLER, LL.D.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the BELFAST MORNING NEWS.

"The present edition of his works is the most splendid we have seen. . . . It is printed on beautiful toned paper, in fine type, and will make one of the finest volumes recently issued from the press. . . . For those who want the most beautiful poetry in the language, got out in a manner worthy of its style and sentiment, this is the work."

From SAUNDERS' NEWS LETTER, Dublin.

"We welcome this edition of the works of our greatest Irish poet with all the warmth and appreciation to which it is entitled."

From the CORK DAILY REPORTER.

"This edition will be welcomed by the literary world at large, but in Ireland it ought to be received with a glow of grateful enthusiasm."

From the LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

"To those who desire to have a copy of Moore, combining convenience and cheapness with finished elegance, we can recommend that now being issued by Mr. Mackenzie."

From the BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"This edition ought to have a large circulation, for it richly deserves it. The publisher has done every thing to make it an edition de luxe."

From the GLASGOW HERALD.

"Mr. Mackenzie is about to produce an edition of Moore which all lovers of art and all lovers of Moore will appreciate; for it will be second to none of the 'elegant editions' of the Irish bard yet published."

From the CALEDONIAN MERCURY, Edinburgh.

"Mr. Mackenzie made the middle classes of the three kingdoms his debtor by his delightful edition of Burns. Appealing to the same class, he here offers them a companion edition of Moore, to our thinking decidedly finer in its get up and illustration than Burns. We are sure he will not appeal in vain; but the appetite and taste, whetted and excited by one great national song-writer, will serve as an inducement to add another to the precious gods of the household."

From the NORTHERN DAILY EXPRESS, Newcastle.

"The edition at once promises to do justice to the exquisite productions of the Irish poet, and to be worthy in every respect of this well-known firm."

From the ULSTER OBSERVER.

"The splendid edition of the works of Ireland's national poet—including the Irish Melodies, Lalla Rookh, National Airs, Legendary Ballads, Songs, &c.—just now in course of publication by Mackenzie of London should have a place in every Irish household."

THE EXCELSIOR READERS are intended to meet a want of late loudly expressed by a large and increasing body of Teachers, as well as by many of H.M. Inspectors of Schools,—namely, of a set of Reading Books, at a moderate price, which shall combine the attractiveness of certain recent series, apart from their puerility and occasional silliness, with a certain amount of definite instruction in the more important branches of knowledge, expressed in a manner suited to the capacity of young people.

Great editorial care has been bestowed in order to adapt the EXCELSIOR READERS to the varied exigencies of the Schoolroom, and to make them as useful as possible to the Teacher.

BRIGHT THOUGHTS

FOR OUR LITTLE ONES.

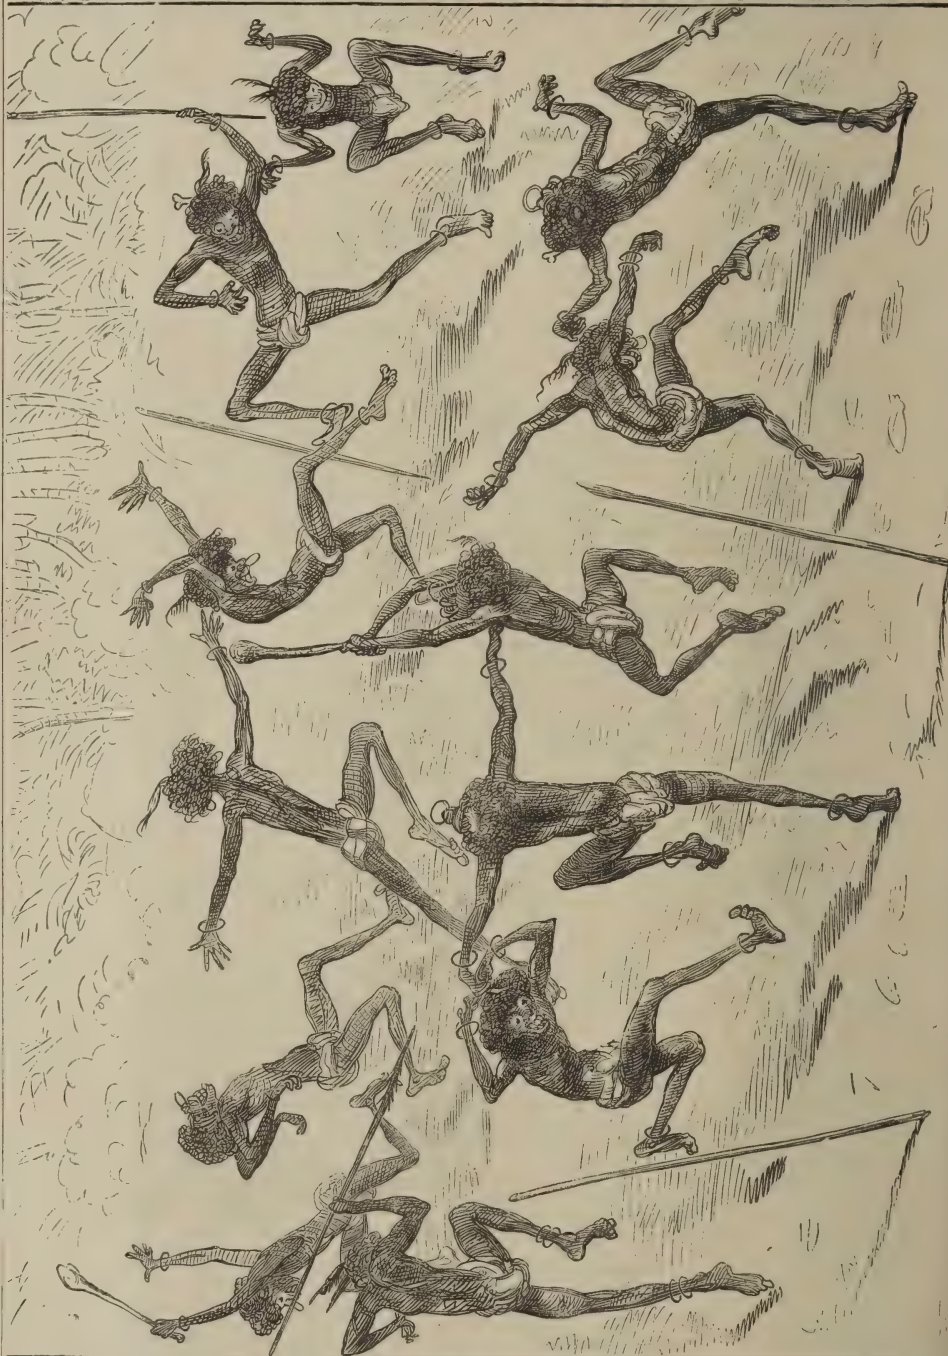

HARRY'S CLEVER DOG.

WITH STORIES AND VERSES BY GRANDMAMMA.

London: CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN.

The new artist, Ernest Griset, who has been styled "the English Gustave Doré," is about to give us a companion volume to his droll "Hatchet Throwers," published last Christmas. The volume, entitled "Legends of Savage Life," is a Miscellaneous recital of certain marvellous stories and beliefs current amongst the wild tribes of America and other distant parts. Mr. James Greenwood, of "Amateur Casua" celebrity, supplies the text, and Griset illustrates the various scenes in the weird, yet grotesque, manner peculiar to himself. Some of our readers may remember that this artist began his career by exhibiting for sale coloured sketches in a small window in Bear Street, Leicester Square. They then realised a few pence each — now they bring as many pounds.

"Ultra-orthodox."—Athenæum.

"A thoroughly good Dictionary of the Bible, at once moderate in price, sound and varied in its critical information, written up to the time, and, above all, uniting independence of thought with orthodoxy of belief, has long been a desideratum. The well-known firm of Cassell and Co. have supplied the want in the publication described above. We have examined it with care and unaffected interest, and finding it thoroughly well adapted to its purpose, warmly recommend it to our readers for their own use as a ready and manageable book of reference, and for circulation among their lay fellow-helpers. We are the more desirous to do this because of an unfair and most spiteful notice of the book which has recently appeared in the Athenæum. The publishers may appreciate the compliment implied in the attack, for if their handsome volumes had been a blunt and feeble weapon, the Athenæum would not have found it worth while to notice them; and it is a yet greater compliment that such a paper, having the will to strike, should strike so feebly and ineffectually. The claims of the book on public attention are of several kinds. The compendious character of the work constitutes one commendation in its favour, and the profuse use of pictorial illustration another, the volumes containing upwards of six hundred engravings. In the theology of the book we are glad to observe an undeviating consistency. Hence it is one of the few publications that Christian men may safely place in the hands of young friends, confident on the one side that the critical character and sound scholarship of the articles will command respect, and on the other that its doctrinal teaching will exercise in every case a safe and wholesome influence. It is in this respect that Messrs. Cassell's publication contrasts so favourably with the Bible Dictionary of Dr. W. Smith."—The Record.

"We heartily commend this praiseworthy attempt to aid those in whose hearts it has been put to set up the family altar."—Record.

"We can very honestly, as we would very earnestly, commend this work to all who may need it. If we mistake not, they will find in it what they have in vain looked for in works of this class—variety and reasonable brevity, as well as devoutness. It is a miracle of cheapness."—Patriot.

"The interest is kept up throughout."—Athenæum.

The Beggar's Benison. A Clydesdale Story. Illustrated by upwards of 300 Amateur Pen and Ink Sketches. In Two Volumes, post 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The author has managed to throw into his story an amount of plain verisimilitude, after the manner of Defoe, makes it a thousand times more readable than the mass of high-flavoured romances. Plain print cannot do justice to which the inimitably grotesque little woodcuts with which this funny story is so funnily illustrated. Altogether, the book is one of the quaintest and most diverting we have read for a very long time."—Saturday Review.

THE QUIVER:

An Illustrated Magazine for Sunday and Week-day Reading.

Published Weekly, price 1d.; in Monthly Parts, 6d.; and in Yearly Volumes, bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d. each.

As a Magazine of Social, Intellectual, and Religious Progress, THE QUIVER addresses itself to the social wants of the People; it makes known their condition, and suggests and promotes, as far as practicable, schemes for their improvement. Under the head of Intellectual Progress, it publishes such educational articles as train the intellect without warping the heart. Science is treated in a popular style; and new discoveries, with their bearing upon the truths of the Bible, are explained, with the advantage of pictorial illustrations. Careful articles are devoted to the geography, history, and condition of Foreign Countries; the history of the Church; Missions, past and present; and all that concerns the spread of the Gospel and the advancement of truth throughout the world.

The utmost care is bestowed upon the "DEPARTMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE." Articles combining information with amusement, Short Tales, Accounts of Adventures by Sea and Land, simple Poetry, and Extracts from the best Authors, are provided for them, while no sentiment or word is admitted to which exception might be taken by the most scrupulous.

THE QUIVER is emphatically a Magazine for Sunday and Week-day reading, cheerful in tone, earnest in its treatment of religious subjects, and, at the same time, strictly unsectarian.

CASSELL'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND

(FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD DOWN TO THE PRESENT TIME), Illustrated with about Two Thousand Wood Engravings.

Vol. I. now ready, price 9s.

The Publishers have striven to lay before the people of this country a fair and impartial narrative of the Story of their Land, excluding all party prejudice and uncharitable views of men and motives—holding up to admiration all that is true and noble wherever it is to be found, and tracing out the rise and the development of those principles which gradually won for Great Britain that freedom which it alone of all nations enjoys.

Lord Brougham, in adverting to this History, at the meeting of the Association for Promoting Social Science, characterised it as one "in which the soundest principles are laid down in almost every instance. The interests of virtue, of liberty, and of peace—the best interests of mankind—are faithfully and ably maintained throughout." And the Daily Telegraph, in reviewing the work, said:—"CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND is, perhaps, one of the most striking examples of cheapness ever issued from the press. The literary merit of the work is on a par with its typographical excellence. It is written in a dignified, simple, and yet picturesque style, that reflects new credit upon the practised and well-disciplined pen of Mr. Howitt."

CASSELL'S Illustrated Penny Readings,

CONDUCTED BY TOM HOOD.

Now Publishing every Week in PENNY NUMBERS, and on the First of every Month in SIXPENNY PARTS.

"The selections are well illustrated, and there is promise in the first number of the making of a goodly volume."
—Athenæum.

"The first monthly part is a wonderful sixpennyworth. It consists of forty large pages (exceedingly well printed) of excellently chosen stories, essays, poems, and miscellanea, by the best English and American authors, and is embellished by a multitude of woodcuts. It also contains a portrait of Mr. Dickens, and a large presentation engraving of the historical picture of the trial of Lord William Russell. The publication really deserves to succeed."—London Review.

"The first monthly part of 'Cassell's Illustrated Penny Readings,' conducted by Mr. Tom Hood, is now ready. It is in small quarto form, convenient for the reading desk; but will make, when complete, handsome volumes for the table, being profusely illustrated with woodcuts of a high class. The pieces, which are in verse and prose, appear well-selected."—Publisher's Circular.

"'Cassell's Illustrated Penny Readings' deserve to be, and no doubt are, a great success. They are nicely printed, and well illustrated; the pieces are all selected from the writings of standard authors, and are all good. We should not forget to mention that the publishers present each purchaser of Part I. with a large woodcut of the trial of Lord William Russell, which alone is worth the money charged for the whole."—Bookseller.

IN WEEKLY NUMBERS AT TWOPENCE, & ALSO IN MONTHLY PARTS.

Cassell's Choral Music.

EDITED AND MARKED BY HENRY LESLIE.

No. I. ready early in January.

It is proposed to issue regularly, every week, a serial of carefully selected and marked Part Music, with occasional New Part Songs by the most eminent composers of the day, and to publish it at such a price as will place it within the reach of every individual member of every Choral Society throughout the kingdom.

CASSELL'S CHORAL MUSIC will be printed in the clearest characters, and on good paper, so that it may be read in choirs with perfect ease; and this advantage of full-sized music will be secured to choralists at the very low price of ONE HALFPENNY PER PAGE.

The work will include the most celebrated compositions of the English Glee and Madrigal schools, Motets by the great Italian and German Masters; and in addition to this, the Publishers have the satisfaction of announcing that they have secured the co-operation of Messrs. BENEDICT, G. A. MACFARREN, HENRY SMART, PINSUTI, HENRY LESLIE, and HATTON, who have undertaken to contribute original Part Songs, composed expressly for this work.

The special distinguishing feature of CASSELL'S CHORAL MUSIC is that the publication will be edited by, and contain the Copyright Marks of Expression of Mr. HENRY LESLIE. The reputation, not only English but European, of the famous choir of which this gentleman is the leader, sufficiently attests the value of those expressional marks by which such marvellous choral results have been obtained.

* * The Publishers will be happy to receive applications for a supply of Prospectuses for Distribution.

Now ready, Part I. of an entirely new and instructive Work, entitled,

PAYNE'S NATIONAL AND DOMESTIC HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

EDITED BY W. H. S. AUBREY, Esq.

The "National and Domestic History of England" will embody the results of many years' reading and study. It will vividly depict both the national and the domestic history of the past, not as a dry, formal record, but as a living reality. It will be free from partisan bias, both in politics and theology. It will aim to represent fairly the opinions, characters, and actions of the great men and women of the past—to point with judicial truthfulness the significance of public events. The labours of all our standard writers on the subject, the series of Parliamentary Debates, and the valuable publications of the Record Commission, have been helpful in the construction of the present work. In addition to these, the vast and varied stores of information contained in the State-Paper Office have been carefully searched, and discriminately used. Only within the last few years have these priceless treasures of political facts become available, and there are many important events on which they cast new light, to the extent of reversing in some instances the teachings of former histories. Numerous interesting letters of Royal and other personages, many of which have never before been printed, will be quoted, as helping to elucidate disputed points.

Each part will be embellished by carefully-executed woodcuts and steel engravings. One special feature of the work will be an occasional plate of costumes of each period, taken from reliable sources, and printed in colours. At the termination of the work, each subscriber will be presented with a splendidly finished steel plate Engraving, size 23½ in. by 17½ in. of the

BATTLE OF WATERLOO,

Painted by J. A. ATKINSON—Portraits by A. W. DEVIS—Drawn and Engraved by JOHN BURNET.

At the conclusion of the work a copious Index and a Table of Contents will be given.

MEMOIR OF COLONEL WHEELER,

Afterwards MAJOR-GENERAL H.E.I.C.S.

By Major H. M. CONRAN, late Bengal Artillery. With Preface by MACLEOD WYLIE, Esq.

COLONEL WHEELER's name is well known in India. For fifty years he was in the H.E.I.C. Service, and the greater part of that time he laboured for the conversion of the natives, and for the spiritual welfare of the British Soldiery. His efforts for the conversion of the heathen would bear comparison with those of many a missionary, and in some instances they were put forth at the peril of his life. His liberality was as remarkable as was his religious zeal. At one time he contemplated giving a thousand pounds per month to promote religious and benevolent objects, and after the Delhi famine he took under his own charge 150 native orphans. He served in a military capacity under thirteen commanders-in-chief.

"STEPHEN WHEELER was one of the most holy, humble, and devoted men I ever met or heard of, and it would be well for me if I followed him as he followed the Saviour. . . . Oh! that in the Indian army among our beloved friends and kindred there, and not in the army only, but among all the Europeans in that land, there might be raised up many like this faithful, noble, humble saint, to spend and to be spent as he was."—MACLEOD WYLIE, Esq., late a Judge of the Calcutta Bench.

"We may say, with great sincerity, that this Magazine ought to lie on every Schoolroom table, and that no Nursery Library can be complete without it. It really does supply a place very well which there have been a great many very unfortunate attempts to supply. Almost every one thinks it easy to please children, and almost every one falls into little affectations in the attempt, which no one detects more quickly than children or resents more keenly. There is no bad work, no artificial sympathy with children, in this little Magazine, and we heartily wish Mrs. Alfred Gatty the success she deserves."—Spectator.

Opinions of the Press on the leading Story in "Good Words" for 1866.

" 'Madonna Mary' is a book of great power and beauty—a perfect work of its kind."—Morning Post.

" From first to last 'Madonna Mary' overflows with the best qualities of its writer's fancy and humour."—Athenæum.

" In 'Madonna Mary' Mrs. Oliphant has added another to her many literary laurels. It is a story told with exquisite simplicity and beauty, and full of the deepest interest."—Morning Star.

—o—

Opinions of the Press on the leading Story in the "Sunday Magazine" for 1866.

" A true and noble work—a novel pure and good and beautiful."—Daily News.

" Mr. Mac Donald is a true poet. The 'Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood' are as full of music as was Prospero's Island; rich in strains that take the ear captive when they are first heard, and afterwards linger long upon it."—Saturday Review.

" The charm and value of Mr. Mac Donald's work need not be sought. They present themselves unasked for in the tender beauty of his descriptions, whether of nature or of life and character; in his almost supernatural insight into the workings of the human heart; and in his unceasing fertility of thought and happy exactitude of illustration. Whoever reads the book once will read it many times."—Fall-Mall Gazette.

" This book is one that only a man of genius could have written. It is full of good thought and good writing."—Examiner.

—o—

Opinions of the Press on the leading Story in the "Argosy" for 1866.

" We do not hesitate to pronounce 'Griffith Gaunt' a noble, though somewhat rugged, poem in prose."—Spectator.

" If we are asked how this great writer manages to keep his stories so pure and sweet, whatever events may be moving across the stage of his drama, we reply, by his exquisite—perhaps in our own day unrivalled—power of conceiving and presenting female innocence. There are some idiots who think a story cannot be moral if any one of the actors does a wrong thing in the course of it. But Ormuzd is greater than Ahriman; and twenty Caroline Ryders cannot darken the page which is beautified and perfumed by a soul like Mercy Vint's. We offer our thanks to Mr. Reade for a courageously conceived, courageously written, and honestly exhilarating story."—Illustrated Times.

Histoire et monuments, par M. l'abbé J.-J. BOURASSÉ; splendide volume in-8° grand Jésus illustré; 32 magnifiques gravures sur bois de grande dimension, d'après les dessins de Karl Girardet et Français.

Jamais il ne se sera rencontré un sujet d'illustration plus fécond et plus attrayant que cette reproduction des châteaux et des palais habités par les souverains de la France depuis les rois mérovingiens jusqu'à nos jours. Les éditeurs ont parfaitement compris que dans une pareille publication l'exécution matérielle devait être à la hauteur de l'intérêt historique; aussi ont-ils fait un livre qui est un monument.

La Sainte Bible illustrée par Gustave Doré est un des plus prodigieux succès que la librairie ait enregistrés dans ses annales. Grâce à cette vogue européenne qui l'a accueillie, la première édition a été épuisée en quelques jours. C'est que, comme l'a dit un éminent critique, "Doré est véritablement ce que les anciens appelaient un portentum, un effort et un miracle de la nature, un monstre de génie servi par un organisme sans pareil. Ces énormes tâches, il les exécute comme en se jouant ; le travail diurne et nocturne ne laisse sur lui aucune trace ; et là où les plus robustes succomberaient de fatigues, il reste frais, jeune, souriant, reposé." Nul doute que la seconde édition, avec ses gravures en partie refaites ou inédites, avec sa brillante ornementation et sa typographie splendide, ne soit appelée à un triomphe aussi éclatant que la première.

ARCHIVES PARLEMENTAIRES.

Publiées sous le Patronage de Son Exc. M. le Président du Corps législatif, PAR MM. J. MAVIDAL & E. LAURENT.

Recueil complet des Debats législatifs et politiques des Chambres françaises de 1800 à 1860, et comprenant un grand nombre de documents inédits.

Les Archives parlementaires reprennent tous les textes originaux dans les impressions ordonnées par les Assemblées délibérantes, et formeront le seul corps d'ouvrage donnant in extenso tout ce qui a été écrit et dit dans les Chambres françaises pendant une période de soixante années. Cette période commence à 1800, c'est-à-dire à la Constitution de l'an VIII.

La première période (1800 à 1814) embrassera dans son ensemble tous les travaux du Tribunat, du Corps législatif et du Sénat.

Puis viendront successivement les débats parlementaires de la Restauration, du règne de Louis-Philippe, de la République de 1848, et enfin du second Empire.

Le petit nombre de volumes de ce recueil le rendra accessible à tout le monde et lui permettra de figurer dans les bibliothèques particulières sans y prendre un trop grand espace. Enfin une double table, chronologique et alphabétique, en fera, pour ainsi dire, une collection de traités spéciaux, une encyclopédie où chacun pourra embrasser d'un coup d'œil les phases successives par lesquelles aura passé une loi dans l'espace de soixante années.

Les Archives parlementaires sont imprimées dans le format grand in-8° à deux colonnes. Elles paraissent par livraisons, ou demi-volumes de 400 pages, du prix de 10 francs.

Chaque volume, indépendamment de la table générale qui terminera l'ouvrage, contient deux tables, l'une chronologique, l'autre alphabétique.

16 demi-volumes sont en vente.

HERRING'S

Pure Wove Writing Paper.

THE various artificial aids to which Paper-makers resort having tended, more or less, to deteriorate the quality of many Writing Papers, it was suggested to Mr. HERRING some years since, at the time he was delivering a course of lectures on Paper-making at the London Institution, that it would be most desirable if he would undertake to guarantee a paper which should not only be free from the ordinary objections, but which should also be prepared in a manner best adapted for writing purposes. This Mr. HERRING at once did, and designated it "PURE WOVE WRITING PAPER," into every sheet of which, in order that no mistake or disappointment might arise, he introduced the Water-mark facsimile of his own signature. Upwards of ten years have now elapsed since this paper was first manufactured; and during that time it has not only been in constant use in some of the largest commercial establishments, but also to a very great extent in distinguished professional and private circles—invariably insuring perfect satisfaction.

PERFECTION in Writing Paper depends mainly upon extreme slowness and simplicity in its manufacture, rather than, as is usually supposed, upon its smartness of finish, which is by far the less important and less difficult operation. Indeed, the principal cause of most objections may be traced to the efforts of the manufacturer to gratify public taste in this particular, many paper-makers adding a large proportion of composition to the fibrous material, in some cases as much as one-third of the whole weight of the paper, similar in character to that which is employed in producing an enamelled card, and thus in the same degree imparting smoothness to the paper. Another practice, perhaps not so objectionable, but much more general, is that of using colouring matter to conceal inferior material. How far this practice extends it is impossible to say; but certainly it is quite the exception to find any paper, of any quality or description, in which colouring matter of one kind or other has not been employed. In this description, however, the finest materials alone are used, without the intermixture of any injurious chemicals; and as far as experience and skill, combined with the most careful manipulation, can insure essential qualities for writing purposes, this paper may be said to have attained the highest excellence.

THE peculiarity of surface is worthy of remark. In the instance of paper ordinarily used, termed "Cream Laid," the surface is impressed with a representation of the old-fashioned laid wire—a novelty which was introduced a few years since, and by which means many ingenious patterns have been tried, all tending, however, to render the surface of the paper more or less unequal, and consequently more or less unsuitable. In the paper before us no impression whatever is made excepting the facsimile signature, by which the paper may be readily known. In order to insure the best possible material for writing, it is formed upon a very fine wove wire, and afterwards sized in single sheets—a finished surface being imparted to it, not in the ordinary way, by metal plates, but by a process of calendering, which renders it decidedly superior for all writing purposes. It would be superfluous to enter here into a technical account of all the peculiarities of its manufacture, the object of the present notice being merely to bring the Paper more prominently forward than has hitherto been attempted.

Richd. Herring.

THOSE who feel an interest in the various processes of its preparation will find them described in an article on Paper-making, which has been written by Mr. HERRING, at the request of the publishers (Messrs. Longman and Co.), for the new edition of "Ure's Dictionary of Arts and Manufactures."

SPECIMEN.

THE Collects, Epistles, and Gospels,
 TO BE USED THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

NOTE, That the Collect appointed for every Sunday, or for any Holy-day that hath a Vigil or Eve, shall be said at the Evening Service next before.

The First Sunday in Advent.

THE COLLECT.

AL MIGHTY God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when he shall come again in his glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through him who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

¶ This Collect is to be repeated every day, with the other Collects in Advent, until Christmas Eve.

THE EPISTLE. Rom. xiii. 8.

OWE no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light. Let us walk honestly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

THE GOSPEL. St. Matth. xxi. 1.

WHEN they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples, saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them. All this was done,

A PRAYER FOR THE QUEEN'S MAJESTY.

O LORD our heavenly Father, high and mighty, King of kings, Lord of lords, the only Ruler of princes, who dost from thy throne behold all the dwellers upon earth; Most heartily we beseech thee with thy favour to behold our most gracious Sovereign Lady, Queen VICTORIA; and so replenish her with the grace of thy Holy Spirit, that she may alway incline to thy will, and walk in thy way: Endue her plenteously with heavenly gifts; grant her in health and wealth long to live; strengthen her that she may vanquish and overcome all her enemies; and finally, after this life, she may attain everlasting joy and felicity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"The Museum of Science and Art' is the most valuable contribution that has ever been made to the scientific instruction of every class of society."—Sir David Brewster in the "North British Review."

"The whole work, bound in six double volumes, costs but the price of a keepsake; and whether we consider the liberality and beauty of the illustrations, the charm of the writing, or the durable interest of the matter, we must express our belief that there is hardly to be found among the new books one that would be welcomed by people of so many ages and classes as a valuable present."
—Examiner.

Testimonial to Double Demy Printing, and 38-in. Steam-power Guillotine Cutting Machine.

"GENTLEMEN,—In reply to yours, I am glad to be able to testify to the good workmanship and accuracy in your Machines. The 38-inch Guillotine Cutting Machine for steam-power supplied by you has been in constant work, and quite answers our expectations. With regard to the Double Demy Reliance Printing Machine, we can hardly give an opinion as to its capabilities, not having had it in use long; but so far I am perfectly satisfied with it; the impression is good, and the little noise it makes when running at quickest speed is a great advantage to it over others. I have therefore pleasure in recommending your Machines to those about to purchase, and remain,

TESTIMONIALS.

"Standard Office, Oldham, August 8th, 1865.

"DEAR SIR,—The little 'Eclipse' machine is working admirably, and we have done 1,200 an hour with the treadle alone.

"Faithfully yours, A. MORRIS."

"To Mr. J. Salmon."

"Liverpool, January 29th, 1866.

"DEAR SIR,—Your Demy 'Eclipse' Machine has fully come up to your description of it when you sold it to us, and is alike a credit to yourself and your engineer. We now do work with it that we never attempted before on a Machine, and from the thoroughly substantial and workmanlike manner in which it is got up, expect it to wear well and give us satisfaction.

"We are, yours very truly,
"A. & D. RUSSELL."

"To Mr. Salmon."

"10, St. Anne-street, Liverpool, Feb. 8th, 1866.

"SIR,—I have had your 'Eclipse' Printing Machine in work for about twelve months, and find it well adapted for all descriptions of 'Jobbing,' both as regards speed and quality of work.

"To Mr. Salmon. "Yours truly, L. JENKINSON."

"24, Nassau-street, Dublin, Feb. 8th, 1866.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to yours of yesterday, asking our opinion of the 'Eclipse' Printing Machine we have had from you, we beg to say it continues to give perfect satisfaction, and we consider it a first-class Jobbing Machine.

"We take this opportunity of bearing testimony (unasked) to the excellence of your Paging Machines, three of which we have in work.

"Very truly yours, BROWNE & NOLAN."

"To Mr. James Salmon."

"54, Castle-street, Aberdeen, Feb. 9th, 1866.

"DEAR SIR,—We have pleasure in giving our testimony to the usefulness of your 'Eclipse' Printing Machine, and to the good quality of the work produced by it. Since we got it, in September last, we have had it constantly in work, and have found it a most useful little machine, with a change of inking rollers, capable of doing any kind of work. The finish and workmanship of the Machine is allowed by several parties who have come to see it to be highly creditable to you; and, on the whole, we have pleasure in recommending it as most useful for all general Jobbing work.

"We are, yours, &c., G. CORNWALL & SONS."

"To Mr. Jas. Salmon."

"Blackburn, Feb. 13th, 1866.

"DEAR SIR,—I have great pleasure in testifying to the value of the 'Eclipse' Printing Machine. I purchased the first that was made, and have had it in constant use upwards of twelve months. There never was a better Machine made for speed and general Jobbing purposes. So much satisfaction has it given, that I hand you an order for a demy size of the same make.

"To Mr. Salmon. "Yours truly, ERNEST KING."

"6, Churchgate, Stockport, Feb. 9th, 1866.

"DEAR SIR,—I have had your 'Eclipse' Machine at work nearly twelve months, and have great pleasure in saying that it executes its work admirably, with expedition, neatness, and efficiency. I only wish I had had it sooner. Wishing you every success with 'The Eclipse,' I remain, dear Sir,

"Yours very respectfully, HENRY FOGGITT."

"To Mr. J. Salmon."

Messrs. BELL & DALDY beg to announce that they have ready for publication a complete revised re-issue of the ALDINE EDITION OF THE BRITISH POETS, originally published by the late Mr. Pickering.

The celebrity which this Edition obtained as the best, most complete, and most elegant collected Edition of the British Poets, caused the copies remaining at Mr. Pickering's death to be sold at a high price. These have now disappeared from the market, and copies are now very rarely met with.

Desiring to provide for the tastes of those who love choice books, the publishers have printed a limited number of copies (only 150 for the English market) on large paper, crown 8vo. This Edition will be found worthy of a place among the choicest specimens of typography, and is not surpassed by any similar production. Sold in Sets only, price £18 18s.
